GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO

THE CLOSE ROLLS.

ORIGIN AND DESCRIPTION OF THE CLOSE ROLLS.

THE Records intituled ROTULI LITTERARUM CLAUSARUM, or CLOSE ROLLS, are a series of Parchment Rolls commencing with the sixth year of the reign of King John, Anno Domini 1204, on which are recorded or enrolled all Mandates, Letters, and Writs of a private nature. They are denominated Close, in contradistinction to another series of Rolls called Patent. The entries registered on the Close Rolls are Letters addressed in the King's name to individuals, for special and particular purposes, and were folded, or closed up, and sealed on the outside with the Great Seal: it is chiefly in these particulars that they differ from the Letters Patent, which were addressed to all the King's liege subjects, and not folded up, but had the Great Seal attached at the bottom, and are enrolled on the Patent Rolls.[1]

The value and importance of the "CLOSE ROLLS" have long been acknowledged by all who have consulted them; but the want of Calendars and Indexes has prevented the miscellaneous matter recorded on them from being generally known and appreciated.

The CLOSE ROLLS are of infinite variety and importance, both in a public and private point of view. They illustrate in an eminent degree the Policy and History as well of foreign nations as of this country, in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, the biography of the Princes and other illustrious personages of the times; and elucidate the Laws, particular and general, the prerogatives of the Crown, the power and influence of the Clergy and Nobility, and the relative condition of the people, as well morally as politically. When it is remembered that these Records contain the commands of the Sovereign upon all matters, whether of a domestic or public nature, many of which were intimately connected with the first interests of the Empire; namely, treaties and other diplomatic correspondence between the Kings of England, France, Germany, and the Heads of other States, exhibiting undoubted evidence, in various forms, relating to feudal and other property, the titles, genealogies, alliances, special rights, and privileges enjoyed by most of the ancient families of the realm, and by innumerable other individuals, their historical value must be at once apparent.

A glance at the following enumeration of subjects, taken promiscuously from documents contained in this Volume, but which is far from being full or complete, may afford, however, a more impressive idea of their miscellaneous nature, and importance.

In reference to the King and his royal rights and authority may be included articles concerning the Royal Prerogative, Crown Revenue, Deodands, Treasure Trove, Gold and Silver Mines, Donationes Regis, Fines for Transgressions, Royal Parks and Forests, Magna Charta, the Charter of the Forest, the Royalties of Hunting and Hawking, Economy of the Royal Household, Royal Marriages, Robes and Dresses, Jewels, Coins, Aurum Reginæ or Queen's Gold, Tournaments, Levying of Armies, King's Messengers, Naval and Military Affairs, Homage, Fealty, Knights' Service, Aids and Marriages, Duels,

[1] The series of Patent Rolls commences in the third year of the reign of King John. It may be inferred from the words "has literas nostras fieri fecimus patentes," which occur towards the conclusion of the patents on the first Patent Roll now in existence, that there was an evident distinction between the Patent and Close Writs.

ORIGIN AND DESCRIPTION OF THE CLOSE ROLLS.

Bail and Pardons, Protections, Truces, public and private Letters to and from the King upon State Affairs, Scutage, Talliage, Livery of Lands, Assignments of Dower, Royal Presents to distinguished Individuals, &c. Connected with the Courts of Law will be found matters relating to Politics and Laws, the Chancellor of England, Deliveries of the Great Seal, Jurisdiction of the Courts of Chancery, King's Bench, and Exchequer, Wardship of Minors, Custody of Idiots and Lunatics, Appointments of Justices of the Peace, Escheators and Coroners, the Privy Council and Summons to the Councils, Ordinances, Books, Records, &c. Under Ecclesiastical Affairs, the subjects of Divorce, Adultery, Alimony, Prayers, Masses, Papal Bulls, Knights Hospitallers and Templars, &c. will occur. In illustration of the Introduction and Progress of Trades and Manufactures various entries will be found respecting Repairs of Palaces, Public Buildings, and Bridges, &c.; — the Arts — Pictures, Paintings, Costume, &c.

It must consequently be evident that the Investigator of English History will find a rich and inexhaustible fund of materials, from the careful examination and thorough understanding of which can alone be drawn any just inferences respecting the real causes of those numerous changes in State Policy, in Legislative Enactments, in the Administration of Justice, and in the moral condition of Society, which took place in the period embraced by these muniments.

The Biographer may also become better acquainted, not only with the public actions of the most distinguished personages that adorn or disgrace those times, but sometimes with the sources, till now unexplored, from whence those actions flowed, and which are traceable to private feelings, or to the personal and domestic habits, manners, and modes of living peculiar to those early periods of our history.

The Statesman, the Political Economist, and the Jurisconsult may derive important information respecting the forms of Government as then existing, and especially as to the acts of King John and King Henry III., in the exercise of their legislative and executive authority, with or without the aid and consent of either their Common or the Privy Council. Moreover, they may investigate the probable origin, and familiarize themselves with the practice of the Courts of Law and Equity. They may penetrate the motives of foreign and domestic Diplomacy — may take a view of the state of Arts and Manufactures — of public and domestic Establishments — of Religious Foundations and Observances — of the Commercial Interests of the Nation — of the nature of Municipal Charters and Institutions; from a proper examination of which they may arrive at a tolerably correct idea of the whole fabric of Society as it then existed: But no description of Reader, perhaps, will be able to reap more advantage from a careful examination of the pages of this Volume than the practical Lawyer, for scarcely a single case can arise, in illustration and explanation of which a knowledge of the ancient usages and law of the Realm may be necessary or important, but he may be able to derive numerous elucidatory passages, many of them of deep interest, and of essential legal importance.

The value of these Records early attracted the attention of His Majesty's Commissioners appointed for the arrangement and preservation of Public Records, when plans were proposed for their publication; the first was in the year 1801, when the Secretary of the Commission was ordered to write to the Keeper of the Records in the Tower, "to request him to cause Calendars and Indexes to the Patent, CLOSE[1], and Charter Rolls, to be printed, of the same size as the Rolls and Journals of Parliament."

By the general Report of the Commissioners to the King, dated 24th March 1802, it appears that, in pursuance of the preceding order, progress had been made in transcribing for the Press the then existing Office Calendars; and by another Report of the date of 24th March 1803, further progress was stated to have been made in transcribing them for the Press; and the Commissioners, in this Report, state to His Majesty, that they had ordered the Official Calendars of the Close Rolls at the Tower to be printed forthwith; inserting therein such of the articles contained in a selection referred to in the Resolution of the Board of the 25th of June 1802.[2] But by the Report in the following year, bearing date the 24th March 1804, it appears that the printing of the Calendars to the Close Rolls was postponed until they had been rendered more complete. No further steps, however, seem to have been taken for completing those Calendars, though a plan for that purpose had been submitted to them by William Illingworth Esq., then Deputy Keeper of the Records, than whom, from his practical knowledge and acquaintance with the contents of the Rolls themselves, no person could be more competent to judge of their value and utility. Mr. Illingworth's plan was not carried into effect, owing, perhaps, to the Commissioners being impressed with an opinion that other works were more immediately deserving of their consideration. Notwithstanding, however, a constant demand for these documents, the Commissioners did not think it advisable to proceed with the completion of the Office Calendars, and their contents remained unavailable to the Public, until the present Commission was formed, when no sooner was the attention of the Secretary drawn to these Rolls by the Editor[1], than he became so fully impressed with a conviction of their legal and historical value, that he immediately recommended to the Board to carry into effect the plan of publication suggested, and now effected. To this recommendation, therefore, the world in general, and historians and antiquaries in particular, are indebted for these valuable illustrations of the history, laws, manners, and customs of the periods to which they refer.

[1] The Office Calendars of the Close Rolls consist of only eight quarto Volumes, commencing with the reign of Henry III., and ending with that of Edward IV.; and in these not more than one instrument out of a hundred is noticed. To the Rolls of the reign of King John there was neither index or calendar, until within a few years since, when an admirable one was completed by Henry Petrie Esq., the present Keeper of the Records; and which is as useful and valuable as a calendar can be made.

[2] Mr. Robert Lemon, chief clerk in the Record Office in the Tower, had, in obedience to an order made 22d July 1800, been employed in making a selection of treaties, negociations, and other instruments of state, for a Supplement then intended to be printed to Rymer's Fœdera, and which he completed towards the close of the year 1801. On the 25th of June 1802, "it was resolved by the Board, that such part of the list of the instruments on the Close Rolls as shall not be fit for insertion in the Supplement to Rymer's Fœdera, be inserted in the Calendar to the Close Rolls."

The most ancient of these Close Rolls now extant is that of the sixth of King John, Anno Domini 1204; but whether there were any anterior to that period, there is no direct evidence upon which to determine; nor is there perhaps sufficient reason to assert that there were none, though the strongest evidence now to be obtained seems rather to sanction such an assertion. On this point it is, however, proper to state what Tyrrell, a most indefatigable and laborious writer, has urged in his Bibliotheca Politica[2], where he says, that Brady (to whom he is violently opposed) alleges, that all the Close Rolls of the reigns of John and Henry III. are extant in the Tower; "which is a great "mistake," says Tyrrell, "for I have had a friend who has given me a note of what Close Rolls "are still extant in those reigns, and what are lost, which you may here see. To begin with King "John: pray observe that all the Close Rolls of the first five years of his reign are gone; and so they "are in the 9th[3], 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th; for certainly there were some in those as well as in the "succeeding years. In the next place, till the 18th[4] there is but one Roll left of each year; but "then there are three, and after that but one or two in a year to the very end. Now pray tell me how "we can be assured that there was not more than one Roll in every precedent year, as well as in the "15th. The like I may say for the reign of Henry III., which though I grant are more entire than "those of King John, there being some left us of every year but the 23d, yet they are but a few, "and for the greatest part but one in each year; never but two in any year in all this long reign, "unless it be in the 39th, in which there are four, which is very strange that in so busy a time as "most of this reign was there should be no more Rolls left; and therefore it seems very probable that "at least half are lost."

This statement of Tyrrell contained in the first part of Mr. Freeman's answer to Mr. Meanwell (for his work is constructed in dialogue), that the Close Rolls for the five first years of the reign of King John were gone or lost, is true only to this extent, that there are none now in existence; though there is, moreover, in favour of his assertion the fact, that of every description of Rolls in the Inventory of Richard II.[5] there are but 75 altogether assigned to the reign of King John: though that Inventory does not particularize the number of Rolls of each description. At present there are only 66 Rolls altogether of the reign of John, and if the number of Close Rolls wanting be added, namely 9, to the number at present known, they will together produce 75, the number stated to be in existence when the Inventory was made. But then this is supposing that the whole series of other Rolls are perfect, namely, the Patent, Fine, and other Rolls, which is not the case, for each series of Rolls is imperfect for other years of this reign. Thus, for the 12th year of the reign of John, there is only one Roll, namely, a Prestita Roll; and for the 11th and 13th years of that reign there are no Rolls at all now extant: the conclusion from which is, that there was no earlier series of Rolls than that of which we are now in possession; namely, the Charter Rolls, commencing with the 1st, the Patent with the 3d, and the Close and Fine with the 6th years of King John's reign. The instruments on the Charter Rolls were perhaps the first species of Royal Diplomas enrolled, and that by reason of their great importance. The plan of recording Charters being found of considerable advantage, Letters Patent were also afterwards recorded, and then Letters Close[1]; and it is not at all improbable that the nine Rolls missing may have belonged to the 11th, 12th, and 13th years of John's reign, but by some accident have been lost. For otherwise how is it that no registration of Charters or Letters Close for either of those years exists?

The other points which seem to embarrass Tyrrell are easily answered. He says, "that till "the 18th," doubtless a typographical error for the 15th, "there is but one Roll left of each year, and "then there are three, and after that but one or two in a year to the very end;" and asks "how he "can be assured that there was not more than one Roll in every precedent year, as well as the 15th?" The answer is simply this: every Roll, when there is only one for a year, is perfect in itself; that is, it commences with the day of the Ascension (from which day the regnal year of John was computed), and ends the day before the following Ascension Day: but when the transactions of one year were so extensive as, by registration of the same, to make one Roll too bulky, the Roll was then divided into two parts for the sake of convenience[2]; and this was the case as to the Rolls of the 15th and 16th years of that reign; the entries of business performed in those years being too great in quantity to be admissible upon one Roll, it was divided into two parts, one for the first, and the other for the last six months of the year; and these parts, with copies of the same (which it was then the practice to make), complete the number of three for each of those years.[3] The same reasoning may be applied to the reign of Henry III.

From the title of the Close Roll of the 6th of John, it may also be inferred to be the first of that species of Roll, for it is observable that this is not styled a Close Roll[4], nor is that specific title applied to this description of Roll until we come to the Roll of the 8th year of that reign[5], though the entries recorded on those of the 6th and 7th years of the same reign are precisely similar to those of the 8th; and it might have happened that the classification of the Chancery Rolls had not, till that period, assumed the form it afterwards bore; for many of the entries on the early Close Rolls more properly belong to that series of entries found on the Fine and Liberate[6] Rolls, all of which may be considered as branches of the Close Rolls.[7]

The documents on the early Rolls are invariably written in corrupted Latin, and being full of abbreviations, with many of the letters bearing a strong resemblance to each other, it is by reference to the context alone that many words can be decyphered. The handwriting prevalent in England at this period was denominated Norman, or the Monastic hand; partly allied to the elegant Saxon, and partly to the Lombardic. A great difference may, however, be observed between this and the Chancery hand of the same period, both as it regards the shape of the letters and the frequent occurrence of abbreviations, the latter[8] being more careless and cursive. The great similarity of the n to the u, of in to m, of the t to the c, and of the f to the s, often renders it a matter of some difficulty to determine on which to fix; but sometimes the distinction is clearly apparent; and, doubtless, as a difference must always have been intended, it may, when imperceptible, have been

---

[1] In support of this inference it may be remarked, that Treaties and other Public Protocols, such as were afterwards entered upon the Close or Patent Rolls, according to their nature, are found to be enrolled on the backs (technically called the "Dors") of the Charter Rolls for the first and second years of John's reign; and that Diplomas of this sort are not to be found entered on Charter Rolls since the commencement of Close or Patent Rolls; the Dors of the Patent or Close Rolls, according to their nature, being the place used for such entries; where those here alluded to would also doubtless have been registered had such species of Rolls been then in existence.

[2] Great inequality in the quantity of registration in different years must necessarily have resulted from the rapid and irregular movements of a sovereign like King John, whose indolence and other vicious habits must have frequently interrupted and delayed legal process of every kind, and consequently occasioned at one time a paucity, and at another time an accumulation of business.

[3] A slight variation in this respect must be admitted as regards the Roll of the 15th year, the third part of that Roll being the Justiciary's Roll, when the King was in Poictou.

[4] "Rotulus terrarum datarum et commissarum et denariorum et quietantionum anno regni Johannis sexto."

[5] Rotulus Litterarum Clausarum anni regni Regis Johannis octavi.

[6] On the Liberate Rolls are recorded precepts directing the payment of sums of money; and also orders to sheriffs to deliver possession of lands or goods which had been extended.

[7] The entries on the Norman Rolls of the 2nd and 6th of John, calendared in Carte's Gascon and French Rolls, tom. i. p. 241, et seq. are also Rolls of a close nature. It appears, however, from Carte's Catalogue, that the matters recorded on them relate wholly to Normandy; but this is not the fact, more than one half of the instruments having relation, not only to other parts of our then ultra-marine dominions, but also to this country, which are omitted. It may not be irrelevant here to state, that the Norman Contrabrevia Roll of the 4th of John had, by some means or other, escaped Carte's notice; and that lately another Norman Roll, of the 5th of John, has been discovered, which also, of course, is not noticed in Carte's work.

[8] The handwritings of the Exchequer Rolls are more analogous to the Monastic than to the Chancery hand.

occasioned by the carelessness of the scribe. More instances of this distinction are to be found on the Pipe Rolls[1] than on the Chancery Rolls, for the most unpractised eye may in the former determine, at a glance, what are the letters intended; but on the latter, where the distinction is less remarkable, the context can alone enable the transcriber to determine what must be the proper word required to complete the sense.

Great ambiguity prevails in the proper names of persons and places which occur on the Close Rolls; for these were either Latinized or Gallicized, whenever it was possible to do so, according to the fancy of the scribe, or the degree of knowledge which he happened to possess. Thus, he rendered into Latin or French a Norman or Saxon appellation, just as he happened to prefer the one to the other. Consequently, to express one and the same name, we sometimes find it written Boscus, at other times Bois; for De Alneto elsewhere will be found Dauney; for Beaumarsh, De Bello Marisco; and for Beaupre, De Bello prato. Whitchurch is sometimes written De Albo Monasterio, sometimes Blancmuster or Blauncmustier. Again, Malus Catulus is sometimes converted into Malcheen, at other times into Machel; De Monte alto into Moald or Montalt; De Sancta Barbara into Senbarb or Simbard. Even when the unaltered name is preserved in the ancient vernacular language, still, owing either to the unsettled and changeable orthography of those times[2], or to the undistinguishable junction of the letters i, n, m, and u, in the same word, it is extremely difficult to ascertain the true reading; one document frequently exhibiting material variations in the spelling of the same name, and to such a degree, that a person, not familiar with the almost countless modifications of English nomenclature, would scarcely be able to recognize the modern name from seeing it as it was anciently written. It is therefore necessary to guard the Reader from concluding, when he sees a proper name, or any other word, spelt in various ways, or in a different manner to that in which he has been accustomed to see it, that such word has therefore been mistaken by the Editor, or that it is a typographical error. At pages 42 and 46 the same name is spelt in four different ways; Resaham, Roffham, Refham, and Besham; and yet the letters are so completely formed, and so incapable of being mistaken, as to admit no doubt of the propriety of literally following the text. The only conclusion, therefore, to be drawn is, that the clerk (whether he copied from the original writ, or whether he composed from oral instruction,) must in either case have been guilty of carelessness. At page 79 is an entry relative to W^m^. de Wrotham, Archdeacon of "Cant." (Canterbury), evidently a mistake for Tant. (Taunton); and this is a very curious instance of a name being misread in the Original, for the clerk who wrote the Patent Rolls also misread this identical name, which has led Le Neve into the error of making William de Wrotham succeed Henry de Sandford in the Archdeaconry of Canterbury[3]; whereas Sandford continued Archdeacon of the latter place until the year 1227, when he was preferred to the Bishoprick of Rochester. The name of Chaworth, de Cadurcis, is spelt not less than twelve different ways. Limintun Meany is written for Luvunton Meavy: here the letters cannot be mistaken, as dots are put over both of the letters i. At pages 241, 242, and 244 the same names are spelt in three different ways; as thus: — John Moriston of Tyreford, John Ayston of Tyrefeld, and John Merston of Tynefeld: and many similar instances could be adduced.

Though much more might have been attempted from a desire to assist the Reader, had the Editor indulged in conjectures, yet so many, and so well founded, are the objections to Editorial surmises and emendations, that he has in this publication adhered strictly to the Record, and printed every document exactly as it there appears; but, wherever the names could be sufficiently identified, they have been

[1] The Pipe Rolls, or the Great Rolls of the Pipe, sometimes called the "Rotuli Annales," contain many important entries respecting the revenue and property of the Crown, and afford the most minute particulars of its territorial possessions, whether ancient demesne, or otherwise. All the fiscal accounts are there recorded; and though these Rolls were not originally intended for any other than financial affairs, yet in the early Rolls much curious matter, nowhere else to be found, is recorded; and even private Charters were, before the commencement of the Chancery registration, entered thereon.

[2] The same name, in being pronounced by a German, an Italian, a Frenchman, a Norman, or an Englishman, inevitably became subjected to a variation in its sound; consequently, if a scribe were writing from oral instruction, he must have been very apt to spell the name falsely, being guided by the manner in which the word was articulated, and not according to its proper orthography; and this is probably the reason why proper names are often disfigured by additions, retrenchments, or changes of letters; to say nothing of mis-spellings which may have been owing to the negligence or inadvertence of the writers.

But these defects of an unsettled and imperfect orthography were not peculiar or confined to English diplomas, as the following testimonies, gathered from most distinguished diplomatic writers, will show.

"Nec offendere quempiam debet, ubi subindè in unâ eâdemque chartâ orthographiæ diversitas observatur, maximè in nominibus propriis; quippè veteres suâ scribendi methodo usi de uniformitate nihil curabant." GUDENUS. Cod. Diplom. Prefat. p. 15.

"Scriptores diplomatum ac chartarum pagensium medio ævo nomina propria personarum æquè ac locorum diversimodè ac distortè sæpè et nonnunquam in uno eodemque documento vario referunt." HERGOTT. Genealogia Diplomatica gentis Habsburgicæ Prolegomen. p. 8.

"Voila encore au 11^e^ siècle, non simplement une orthographe, mais une construction diférente, en moins d'une ligne: et cela répété en diverses pièces. L'orthographe des noms et des mots barbares ou dérivés des langues étrangères n'est pas moins incertaine dans les siècles suivans." NOUVEAU TRAITÉ de Diplomatique, par deux Religieux Bénédictins. Paris, 1765, 6 vols. in 4^to^. tom. v. p. 508.

ORIGIN AND DESCRIPTION OF THE CLOSE ROLLS.

arranged in the several Indexes, in so conspicuous a manner as to leave no room for mistake. Topographers and County Historians must, however, be aware, that it is next to an impossibility for any person to be perfectly acquainted with such a variety of proper names as are contained in this volume; and though much labour has been bestowed upon all the means of correcting and of avoiding errors, yet the Editor is fully aware that, in defiance of the most zealous care, some possibly still remain. They ought not, however, to be ascribed to inattention or negligence; and, by observing a simple rule, they can easily be rectified. Such errors are those which regard the letters m, n, v, u, occurring in groupes of four, five, six, or more upright strokes of the pen, undistinguishable by any peculiarity to guide the eye to their proper signification. Whenever a cluster of these letters appears together, and the name is consequently doubtful, count the number of these upright parallel strokes requisite in composing the name presumed to be the right one, allowing three strokes for an m, and two each for the supposed n, v, or u, and observe whether the printed name is found to correspond; as in Mimican, which has sometimes been printed Munican, from the letters bearing that appearance. Here it will be seen that the number of upright parallel strokes necessary to compose the first part of either of those names, written thus — munican, is eight; and as clusters like these, of several upright parallel strokes, frequently occur, the difficulty of determining upon the right reading may easily be conceived.

There is another cause of confusion, upon which a remark is necessary. Hitherto, in Publications of Records, words ending in tio, &c. have, with much impropriety, been invariably spelt with a c, instead of the t. That mode is here pursued, wherever it had the appearance of c, but not otherwise; for a manifest difference is often perceptible, in the early Rolls, between the two letters, especially in words where c and t stand in juxta-position; for instance, in rectum and rettatus, &c. Again, there are cases wherein the t occurs by itself, in substitution for which a c is so decidedly inadmissible, that the Editor has not adopted it, but it is not improbable that an occasional error may be found to arise from the difficulty of always distinguishing between the c and t, from the great similarity in the formation of those two letters by some scribes.

ORIGIN OF ENROLMENTS.

ORIGIN OF ENROLMENTS.

THE custom of recording documents on Rolls of parchment, though of very ancient date, commenced, nevertheless, at a period subsequent to the Conquest; for no vestige can be traced of such a system during the Anglo-Saxon dynasty.[1] "Apud Anglo-Saxones," says Hickes,[2] "etiam mos erat leges Regum latas in codicibus monasteriorum, tanquam in tabulas publicas referendi." It may be assumed that, had such a plan been then in operation, the same would have been adopted by the Conqueror, to perpetuate the survey[3] of the kingdom which he caused to be made, and for the preservation of which he evinced so much zeal and anxiety. As to the precise time when the use

[1] Transfers of property and legal grants were registered by the Anglo-Saxons in the "Land-boc," and in the vacant leaves of Mass-books, "In membranis liturgicis contractus suos scribendi mos apud Anglo-Saxones fuit;" and these registrations, though received as evidence in courts of justice, were not, however, official registers preserved for that purpose in the King's Court; nor could there have been then any judicial records, as all the juridical proceedings were conducted by oral pleadings, and determined in a plain and simple manner, in the Folkmotes of the several districts. These were not officially recorded; although upon special occasions, it appears that the decision of the Wittena-gemote was made out "sedente curiâ," with the names of the principal persons present subscribed to it, and a memorandum afterwards entered, in perpetuam rei memoriam, on the blank leaf of some missal, "Mos erat apud Anglo-Saxones in libros, qui in Cœnobiorum bibliothecis asservati erant, tanquam in tabulas publicas, acta curiarum communium referre et emptiones, venditiones, donationes, &c." The testimony, nevertheless, of these proceedings, for legal purposes, was allowed only to be received in the Hundred or County Courts in which the trial had taken place.

[3] This important territorial survey has been supposed by some persons to have been originally written in the form of a Roll, in consequence of a passage in Ingulphus, an historian contemporary with the Conqueror, who, speaking of this survey, says, "Ipse Rotulus vocatur Rotulus Wintoniæ, et ab Anglicis pro sua generalitate, omnia tenementa totius terræ integræ continente, Domesdei cognominatur; talem Rotulum et multum similem ediderat quondam Rex Alfredus, qui quidem Rotulus Wintoniæ vocatus est, quia disponebatur apud Wintoniam conservandus." The word Rotulus must not, however, be understood to signify simply and exclusively a Roll, for it is synonimous with the word Liber. Vide Dufresne, sub voce Rotulus; where "Veteres volumen, recentiores Græci εἱλητάριον appellarunt, nostri Roolle et Rolle, Germani Rodel. Ejusmodi porro chartarum volumina inter magistratuum insignia in utriusque Imperii Notitia conspiciuntur, ut inde liceat conjicere, horum usum ea tempestate obtinuisse, hoc est, circa tempora Theodosii junioris, in quæ acta judicaria referebant, licet etiam codicibus, qui et hic effinguntur, uterentur." ORIGIN OF ENROLMENTS.

of Rolls, for the entry of matters of business, first began, there is still considerable doubt; Antiquaries are much divided in opinion on the subject, and indeed, it is difficult, if not impossible to ascertain, with any degree of certainty, the exact period of its commencement.

The Author of the Dialogus de Scaccario[1] asserts that the ROTULI ANNALES of King Henry I. were then remaining in the Exchequer[2]; and Alexander de Swerford, Archdeacon of Shrewsbury, who was a clerk in the Exchequer in the third year of the reign of Henry III., and the compiler of the Red Book, states, that he had seen some of them[3], but that he knew of no one who had seen any of so early a period as that of the Conqueror.[4] That no ROLLS of a date antecedent to that of the 18th Henry I.[5] are now in existence is certain. It may, therefore, be presumed, that the practice of enrolling prevailed shortly after the Conquest.

That the making of Enrolments was first practised in that branch of the Curia Regis called the Exchequer, there can be little or no doubt; that such practice was introduced by the Normans is also admitted: and it may be assumed, that the advantages resulting from this method of preserving the memory of public transactions became so apparent, as, in all probability, to induce the officers of the other branches of the Curia Regis to adopt a similar plan of perpetuating the transactions and occurrences of their respective departments. Madox, in endeavouring to account for the origin of Chancery Enrolments, which differ in their form and mode from those of the Exchequer, seems to think, that the acts of Chancery, at the end of the twelfth century, being so interwoven with those of the Exchequer, and the business of both being principally directed towards ascertaining and preserving the rights of the King, was owing to both these Courts having been held together in the same place, and to the Chancellor having been in the habit of affixing the Great Seal to all instruments promiscuously, whether appertaining to one Court or to the other[6]; but as soon as the Chancery, which was the Secretarial department of the Curia Regis, came to be separated from the Exchequer, and to be held in a different place, (which happened towards the latter part of the reign of Richard I.,[7]) that then it became necessary to adopt a more particular mode of recording and distinguishing the several acts of that Court, the business of which had very materially increased since the two offices of Chancellor and Chief Justiciary were filled by one and the same person.[8]

Great inconvenience had been felt in the reign of Richard I. from the want of proper memoranda whereby it could be ascertained what Charters had previously been granted, under the Great Seal, to individuals; which was, perhaps, another motive for settling some regular mode of registration; for many persons were obliged, at a great expence, to get those Charters renewed which had been

[1] Madox has satisfactorily proved, in his Disceptatio Epistolaris, addressed to Lord Halifax, prefixed to the Dialogus, that Richard Fitz Nigel, Bishop of London, and Treasurer to Richard I., was the author of that work, and not Gervaise of Tilbury, to whom it had been generally ascribed.

[5] This Roll has generally been supposed to belong to the fifth year of the reign of Stephen; but Madox has conclusively proved that it belonged to that of Henry I. Treating of it in his Disceptatio Epistolaris de Magno Rotulo Scaccarii, he says, "Hactenus, Amplissime Baro, tanquam in lance libravi subjectam materiam in tres quæstiones divisam; primam, utrum vetus hic Rotulus sit Regis Henrici II.; secundam, an R. Stephani; tertiam, an R. Henrici I. Libramenti istius hic est effectus; majus rationis pondus in tertiam quæstionem recidit: nempe Rotulum illum ad Henrici I. tempora oportere referri: utrum autem ad annum decimum octavum, an alium quempiam annum dominationis illius Regis, periti judicent," &c. Prynne, who carefully examined the contents of this Roll, pronounces it to be of the 18th Henry I. Prynne de Auro Reginæ, in Append. p. 5.

[6] "Cancellarius, sicut in Curia sic ad Scaccarium magnus est: adeo ut sine ipsius consensu vel consilio nil magnum fiat, vel fieri debeat. Verum hoc habet officium dum residet ad Scaccarium, ad ipsum pertinet custodia sigilli Regii, quod est in Thesauro, sed inde non recedit nisi cum præcepto Justitiæ ab inferiore ad superius Scaccarium a Thesaurario vel Camerario defertur, ad explenda solum negotia Scaccarii. Quibus peractis in loculum mittitur, et loculus a Cancellario consignatur, et sic Thesaurario traditur custodiendus. Item, cum necesse fuerit, signatus sub omnium oculis Cancellario offertur; nunquam ab ipso vel ab alio alias offerendus. Item ad ipsum pertinet Rotuli qui est de Cancellaria, custodia per suppositam personam; et sicut viris magnis visum est de omni scriptura Rotuli Cancellarius æque tenetur ut Thesaurarius, excepto duntaxat de hoc, quod scribitur in thesauro receptum: licet enim non præscribat ut Thesaurarius conscribit tamen etsi ille erraverit, licet ipsi vel Clerico ejus Thesaurarium cum modestia corripere, et quid debeat suggerere." Dial. de Scacc. lib. 1. cap. 5.

[7] The cause of the separation of the two Courts is conjectured by Madox, and with great probability, to have been this: that during the time of Richard I., being out of the kingdom, William de Longchamp, the High Justiciary and Chancellor, was, by the power and intrigues of the King's brother, John Earl of Mortain, deprived of his office of Chief Justiciary; and although he for some time continued to be Chancellor, he did not attend and act at the Exchequer as theretofore, by which means the business of the Chancery, which had previously been transacted at the Exchequer, was then done at another place. Hist. Exch. p. 132.

ORIGIN OF ENROLMENTS.

passed under the Great Seal, lost off the Isle of Cyprus.[1] For this there would have been no occasion had such Charters been registered by the King's Chancellor.[2]

The consequence of the separation of the Chancery from the Exchequer was the organization or classification of the different acts which passed under the Great Seal, each of which was entered upon a distinct Roll appropriated to instruments of its peculiar class; and hence the origin of the PATENT[3], CLOSE, CHARTER[4], FINE[5], and other Rolls.

The mode of joining or fastening the membranes of the various Rolls together was, perhaps, purposely invented to distinguish them from the Rolls of the Exchequer and those of the Curia Regis. In the Chancery Rolls the membranes are sewed together consecutively, making one continuous Roll; whereas, in those of the Exchequer and Curia Regis, each membrane is fastened or filed at the top with a slip of parchment, leaving the ends loose. The same manner of making up the Rolls is, at this day, peculiar to each of the two Courts.[6]

PLAN OF THIS PUBLICATION.

PLAN OF THIS PUBLICATION.

THIS Work presents the whole of the CLOSE ROLLS of the period to which it extends, as it was considered that a mere Calendar would be but imperfect and unsatisfactory, and that an Abstract of them would be scarcely more useful, inasmuch as it is impossible to predetermine what may or may not, to particular individuals and for special purposes, be important; added to which is the consideration that of many of the entries on these Rolls no further abridgment could be effected, as the enrolling clerk had himself abridged the Original Mandates, so that there is hardly a word but what is in some way of real importance, not merely to the sense, but as tending to determine the object and bearing of the document; no useless words being employed. Moreover, it has been proved by actual trial, that documents so short as the generality of those contained in the Close Rolls can be copied in much less time than would necessarily be occupied in abstracting them, an expert writer being able to copy a document very nearly as fast as he can decypher it; whereas, for the purpose of abstracting it, he must indispensably first read the document through, next, he must make himself familiar with its various points and bearings,

[1] When Master Roger Malus Catulus (Malchien), Vice Chancellor to Richard I., was drowned off the Isle of Cyprus, and the King's Great Seal was lost, the King ordered all Charters to be newly sealed, as appears by the testimony of contemporary historians. "Deinde veniens (Ricardus) in Normanniam (anno 1194) molestè tulit quicquid factum fuerat de supradictis treugis, et imputans Cancellario suo hoc per eum fuisse factum, abstulit ab eo sigillum suum, et fecit sibi novum sigillum fieri, et mandavit per singulas terras, quòd nihil ratum foret, quod fuerat per vetus sigillum suum; tum quia Cancellarius ille operatus fuerat indè minus discretè quàm esset necesse, tum quia sigillum illud perditum erat, quando Rogerus Malus catulus, vice cancellarius suus, submersus erat in mari ante insulam de Cipro; et præcepit Rex quòd omnes, qui chartas habebant, venirent ad novum sigillum suum ad chartas suas renovandas." Rerum Anglicarum scriptores post Bedam, 1596. p. 425. "Duæ busciæ perierunt in quibus multi milites, et servientes, de familia Regis submersi sunt; inter quos, proh dolor! Magister Rogerus Malus catulus, vice cancellarius Regis, submersus est, et sigillum Regis, quod gestabat in collo ejus suspensum, inveniebatur." Hoveden, p. 393.

[2] In corroboration of the opinion that Chancery enrolments were not in existence prior to the reign of John, one or two instances may be deemed sufficient. It has been alleged that Richard I., on pretence of his seal being carried out of his kingdom, and lost at sea, compelled all persons who, prior to that accident, had obtained Grants from him, to renew them under the new seal; a Charter which Richard had granted having been destroyed, a jury was impanelled for the purpose of ascertaining the particulars of that grant; and then a new Charter was made out according to their verdict, which stated the contents of the old one; a procedure which would not have been adopted had any enrolment of the first of these Charters been then in being, as such enrolment would have been as good evidence as the Charter itself. Again, the Charter granted to Alan Basset in the sixth, was in the ninth year of the same reign confirmed under the new seal. "Is erat tenor cartæ nostræ in primo sigillo nostro, quod quia aliquando perditum fuit, et dum capti essemus in Alemannia in alienâ potestate constitutum, mutatum est, hujus autem," &c. Had there been Rolls of Grants in existence at that time, Richard could not have imposed upon his subjects heavy fines for the renewal of those Charters, for the reasons already stated.

[3] The Patent Rolls contain Grants of Offices, Lands, Privileges, and Immunities: Restitutions of Temporalties of Bishops, Abbots, and other Ecclesiastical persons: Grants, Confirmations of Grants made to Corporate bodies: Grants in fee-farm, Special Liveries, Patents of Creation, &c.

[4] The Charter Rolls contain Royal Grants to Cities, Boroughs, and Corporations: Grants of Markets, Fairs, Free Warrens, &c.

[5] The Fine Rolls contain general Liveries of lands holden in capite of the Crown, Writs of "diem clausit extremum," Fines paid for Alienation, for Relief, "pro licentiâ concordandi," "pro exoneratione militum," &c.

[6] Many opinions have prevailed as to the preference of the modes of enrolment practised by each Court. The Rolls of the Exchequer are not so convenient for reference as those of the Chancery, whilst they are more exposed to laceration and other injury, owing to the ends of each skin hanging loose and unprotected; and although, when the Chancery Rolls arrive at any great bulk, there is an inconvenience, and, perhaps, some wear occasioned by coiling and uncoiling the membranes, to which the Exchequer Rolls are not subject, nevertheless the form used in the Chancery is better calculated for the preservation of the documents entered on the membranes; a reason which is decisive for giving it the preference.

and then he will have to consider the most concise and explicit way of forming the abstract. Added to all this, there is a difficulty, not so slight as it may appear, in reducing into a more compendious form matter that has already undergone the process of curtailment, and which by re-abridgment would be subjected to the danger of omitting some expression which possibly might alter the purport or embarrass the sense of the whole instrument.

PLAN OF THIS PUBLICATION.

In being furnished with a transcript of the documents themselves, the Reader can suffer no disappointment; for it often happens that what is deemed worthless by some, may be held by others to be of the greatest value; nor can he have any anxiety to see the Originals, instigated by the possibility of discovering some different reading, or other matter which had escaped the notice and proper attention of the abstracter. So important, indeed, has it been thought for every document to be printed in the most correct manner, that in many instances obliterations of whole sentences have been retained (though marked as effaced in the Original) as essential to the meaning, it being impossible without them thoroughly to understand the document in which they occur, as the scribe appears frequently to have erased words fatal to the sense, forgetting at the moment the structure of the sentence; and, consequently, unless the effacement or obliteration had been retained, the instrument must have appeared to be incapable of rational construction; whereas, by exhibiting it to the Reader whole and entire, he is enabled to ascertain its real meaning. For these reasons it has been deemed expedient to give a complete and literal transcript; in short, as close a fac-simile of the Originals as modern types would admit. No effacement or obliteration has, however, been preserved where it was evidently a mere clerical error, or where the sense of the document is not obviously affected by it.

Wherever the sense of a document happens to be obscure from the omission of a word, and no doubt can exist as to the word which ought to have been inserted, it has been thought advisable to supply such word; but wherever this has happened, the deficiency (whether of a word, or of any other accidental omission,) has invariably been printed within crotchets by way of parathesis. In cases where a duplicate of the Roll has been found, the deficiency has been supplied from that source, still, however, exhibiting it within crotchets, for the purpose of enabling the Reader to satisfy himself that nothing has been inconsiderately inserted by way of conjecture. It is only necessary to add, that in no case whatever has the liberty been taken of altering or amending a word when wrong from either clerical or grammatical error, such inaccuracies being denoted by an underline, to indicate that such error did not escape attention.

DUPLICATES. — Of most of the early Patent, Fine, and Close Rolls in the Tower there are some termed Duplicates; but this term or denomination must not be understood in the usual meaning of a Duplicate or Counterpart made and authenticated at the same time with its Original, for these Duplicates may either have been so made, or be merely Copies transcribed at the distance of five or ten years, or other indefinite period, subsequently to the making up of their Originals. Of such Duplicate Rolls there are now extant only fourteen of the class called Close Rolls, namely, those of the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th years of the reign of King John, and of the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th years of the reign of Henry III. The reason of Copies having been made of the Rolls of those years in particular, and not of any Rolls either of an antecedent or of a subsequent period, has not yet been discovered; but that these Duplicates or Copies cannot be considered as contemporaneous with their Originals, but rather that they must be deemed to have been made somewhat later, though evidently within a few years of the Originals, may be reasonably inferred. There is a distinctive character about some of the Copies, which mark a manifest difference between them and the Originals; though, in regard to many, a difference would only perhaps be perceived by persons possessed of a familiar acquaintance with ancient muniments. Upon a careful examination and comparison of the Original with the Copy, there will, however, always be found some material particulars, which clearly distinguish the Original from the Copy.

Of these characteristic particulars a few instances are here submitted: —

Firstly. The Instruments on the Copies are somewhat abridged by the non-insertion of certain technical phrases; for instance, in the Originals, the precepts which begin with the words, or similar thereto, "Rex dilecto et fideli suo Willielmo Brewer," will sometimes be found in the Copy reduced to "Rex Willielmo Brewer." Again, many well-known phrases and clauses of frequent occurrence, even when entered at length in the Originals, are not unfrequently expressed in the Copies by an "&c.," as the clauses "Quia volumus et firmiter præcipimus," and "Quamdiu Regi placuerit," which will often be found abbreviated in the Copy to "Quia, &c." "Quamdiu, &c."

Secondly. When the writer of the Original Roll has fallen into a grammatical error, or omitted a word important to the sense, such error or omission is often, though not always, found to have been corrected in the Copy, probably from the copiest of the latter having detected the blunder, and feeling an unwillingness to perpetuate what could only embarrass the reader.

Thirdly. All documents cancelled on the Original Rolls are, without exception, excluded from the Copy.

Fourthly. When a mandate has by accident not been entered on the Original Roll, such mandate is sometimes copied on a slip of parchment, and sewed to the Roll at the place where mandates of the same date occur, the slip so attached being in general a verbatim copy of the mandate as it was originally dispatched. In the Copies, these mandates are introduced in their proper places, but abridged in the same manner as the other documents. If, however, an entry be left out in the Copy, which is of very frequent occurrence, it is never added by annexing a slip to the Roll, but is introduced at any place where there happened to be room for its insertion, without regard to the chronological arrangement; and occasionally the omissions are not even supplied.

Fifthly. The proper names of persons and places are generally more correct in the Original than in the Copy.

Sixthly. The handwriting and appearance of the Original Rolls are very distinct from those of the Copies. In the former, several autographs are perceptible, and the entries are all properly separated. But on the Copies, the entries are written in one hand, and are much crowded together, so closely, indeed, that on some of these Rolls the commencement of each document cannot easily be discovered.

Seventhly. On the Originals are to be seen divers symbols and characters, some of which were evidently intended as private memoranda for the use of the scribe. A few of these have been inserted in this Volume, because it is obvious that some particular meaning was attached to them. These must not, however, be depended upon as general guides, for there does not seem to have been, for the same class of instruments, any peculiarly appropriated mark; on the contrary, they are most frequently dissimilar in their forms, and apparently depended only on the fancy or caprice of the scribe.[1] Some, indeed, of these characters seem to have been the production of the fancy of the clerks.[2] On the Copies, however, none of these marks or devices are to be found.

Eighthly. On the Original Roll memoranda similar to the following frequently occur: "Hinc mittenda sunt contrabrevia," &c.[3] These words are never to be found on the Copies, but their meaning is this: they form a memorandum for the Chancery clerk, reminding him that all the counter-writs preceding such memorandum had been estreated and transmitted to the Exchequer; and that all similar writs, after such memorandum, remained to be estreated.[4]

Ninthly. Some of the entries on the Original Rolls are written in cursive and straggling hands; in others, some of the letters are much blotted; and in several of these instances, the scribes of the Copies have left spaces for such words as they were unable to decypher. A remarkable instance of this occurs on the Close Roll 15th of John, Part 1, at the end of membrane 3, where there is a very considerable obliteration, which appears to be contemporaneous. On the Copy of the Close Roll 15th John, Part 3, the scribe seems to have been unable, or he did not chuse to take the trouble of decyphering two instruments which happened to be greatly effaced, and consequently he has left a space on the Roll for them. The greater part of these two documents has, however, been recovered. The instances of misreadings and inattention on the part of the Chancery scribes seem, therefore, to afford irrefragable proof that what have been hitherto denominated "duplicates," ought not to be so considered in the sense of authenticated counterparts, but merely as copies of the Original Rolls, made up at a period, though perhaps but a few years, subsequently to that which must be assigned to the Originals. That such is the fact must be acknowledged by all who are well versed in ancient writings, upon a careful comparison of the two sets of Rolls with each other.

---

[1] To have given specimens of such marks in type would have been almost impracticable, and could only have been effected at an enormous expense.

[2] See pp. 264. 281. 315.

[3] According to Madox, the word Contrabreve, occurring in the margin of a Roll, signifies that a Counter-writ was made out at the same time with the Original, and sent into the Exchequer, in order that the treasurer of the Exchequer might be able to check the various accounts of the sheriffs, and other persons, rendered into the Exchequer; for instance, if the King wanted any thing to be purchased, either for his own use, or as a present to any one, he issued a mandate out of Chancery, commanding some sheriff or farmer to procure the thing wanted, for which the sum laid out would be allowed to him at the Exchequer, when his account was given in. Upon this, a Copy of the mandate was sent into the Exchequer, in order that the treasurer might be certified of the truth of the statement of the sheriff; and when such writ issued, the scribe made this mark against the entry, to signify that a Copy of that document was to be sent into the Exchequer.

[4] An Estreat is an extract or copy of a document enrolled, either on the Patent, Close, or Fine Rolls, relating to fines, fee farms, &c.; that is, when a grant was made, wherein any sum of money was reserved or to be rendered to the Crown, a notice of the same was sent into the Exchequer, in order that the treasurer might know what sums of money he had to expect. Such Records, or Estreats, when they got into the Exchequer, were then denominated "Originalia."

Every one of these Transcript Rolls has been compared with its Original, and in no one case whatever have they been found to contain more than the Original[1]; but, on the contrary, many instruments are inscribed on the Originals, which, through inadvertence, have been excluded from the Copies. The Transcripts have, notwithstanding, been of great service in many cases, especially when some part of the Original Roll has been effaced. In all such cases, wherever a passage or a word could not be made out in the Original, the deficiency has been supplied from the Copy, but is printed between two crotchets, thus [ ]. It should be remarked that in the Original Rolls most of the final membranes have been miscalled the first, and being much lacerated and defaced, rendered a reference to the Copies[2] in such instances necessary, which gives therefore an additional value to them; but it has neither been deemed necessary, nor expedient to notice and perpetuate all the different modes of spelling words, or other trifling deviations from the Original, which undoubtedly deteriorate to a certain extent the value of the Copy, but can only have arisen from errors or oversight on the part of the transcriber. If, indeed, both were Copies, instead of one being the Original, and the other a Copy, then the variations of the two might be worthy of notice.

The portion of this Volume which refers to the Close Roll of 15th of John, Part 2, has been wholly printed from a Copy, and because from its general appearance, combined with internal evidence, it was not thought entitled to be considered, as it hitherto has been, an Original Roll, a notice to that effect has been placed at its commencement, in page 143. The Editor having here ventured to advance an opinion of his own, it is proper to guard the Reader from ascribing to it more value and importance than fairly belongs to it; for although such opinion is founded on what appears to him to be incontrovertible proof, a question may hereafter be raised in Courts of Law concerning the propriety of admitting in evidence office copies taken from the Roll in question, on the plea of its not being an Original Record.

It is also necessary to draw attention towards that portion of this Volume which relates to the Rolls of the 8th of Henry III. They consist of one Original Roll, divided into two Parts, and one Copy of the whole. The latter part of the Original Roll was, however, only discovered by mere accident whilst this work was printing, amongst the Fine Rolls; and it having been considered as a Fine Roll for upwards of two centuries, it has, of course, during that period been missing from its proper place amongst the Original Close Rolls.[3] The recent discovery not having been made until after the latter part of the Roll for the 8th of Henry III. was printed, as appears at page 612, that part was of course transcribed from the Copy of the Roll for that year. This fact will be found stated in a note at page 633, referring the Reader to the explanation here given: it has therefore occasioned the necessity of printing the latter part of the Original Roll itself, which, though chiefly a repetition of what had been given before, was nevertheless the only satisfactory way in which the variations of the two could be clearly and fully shewn; and the circumstance is not, perhaps, to be regretted, since it will afford a general exemplification of the differences which have here been attempted to be described as existing between Original Rolls and their Copies.

The two Rolls of the 9th Henry III. present a very remarkable anomaly, as each consists of a portion both of the Original and of the Copy. This fact (only ascertained by a laborious collation) rendered it excessively difficult to decide upon the course best to be pursued in printing them[4]; [1] Excepting where additions have been made to such Copy subsequently to the period when the Copy itself was made; and of all such additions particular notice has been taken.

---

[2] Many of the documents in the late edition of the Fœdera have been transcribed from the Copies, instead of the Originals.

[3] It may not be uninteresting to explain the way in which this error is supposed to have originated, and of the reasons why it was not sooner discovered.

It seems that the last or concluding membrane of the Duplicate Fine Roll for the 8th year of Henry III. (with the title of the same written both upon its intus and its dorsum) had, by some accident, become detached from the said Fine Roll, and by mistake been sewed on to the end of the final membrane of that 2d part of the Original Close Roll for the same year recently found; that about two centuries ago, when the Rolls in the Tower were newly covered or furnished with wrappers, and also inventoried, the name and date of each Roll being respectively indorsed on its cover or wrapper, upon such occasion the title as it appeared upon such membrane of the Fine Roll so attached to the Close Roll first attracting the notice of the persons employed in the performance of that duty, the same title was by them transferred to the cover or wrapper of the Close Roll in question, giving it, from that time, the appearance and character of a Fine Roll; and that, having been so marked, it was inventoried by those persons whose names are subscribed at the bottom of each reign: viz. John Borough (Garter), Aug. Vincent (Windsor Herald), and Geo. Robson; but if the Indenture made in the 5th year of the reign of King Richard II. noticed at p. iii. can be implicitly relied on, it would seem that the confusion of these Rolls had taken place before that time, for two Close Rolls and three Fine Rolls are therein assigned to the 8th year of Henry III., whereas it now appears that there are only two Fine and three Close Rolls for that year.

That the discovery should only now be accidentally made need not create much surprise, the Fine Rolls being but partially available to the Public from their want of Calendars and Indexes.

[4] These Rolls of the 9th of Henry III. commence the second volume of this work.

for to print both Rolls would be attended with a useless expence; Part 2 being, as far as membrane 17, only a copy of Part 1, as far as membrane 4, with the exception of one or two trifling alterations, which are apparently subsequent emendations: these, however, are all noticed. Nevertheless, about two thirds of one membrane (where the change of Rolls took place) has been printed twice, not only in order that it may be shewn in what manner this singular mistake originated, but also as the best means of exhibiting all the matter that occurs on the two Rolls.

The probable way of accounting for the irregularity seems to be this:

Supposing Part 1 and Part 2 to have been made up at the same time, and that Part 1 was at first the Original Roll, and was continued to be so as far as membrane 4; then, it seems that, by some mistake, the writs were for a time wrongly enrolled on Part 2 instead of Part 1; and that the error was not discovered for some time afterwards, when it was attempted to be rectified by enrolling on the dorsum of Part 1 those instruments which had been entered by mistake on the intus of Part 2; but this being found to be impracticable, Part 1, as the Original Roll, was brought to a hasty termination, and Part 2 continued as the Original Roll. This supposition is suggested for the following reasons; viz. Grammatical errors in Part 1 have been corrected in Part 2.—Other trifling errors of grammar in Part 1 have been unconsciously repeated in Part 2.—A few unimportant words, not to be found in Part 1, are inserted in Part 2, with an intention of assisting the sense; and, in one or two instances, it is plain that the scribe of Part 2 has committed an error in inserting such words, the same being in nowise necessary, but rendering the passage in some degree more obscure.—There are several errors in Part 2 not to be found in Part 1; and interlineations and subsequent alterations in Part 1 appear not as such, but properly placed in line, in Part 2.—Many words of doubtful construction in Part 1 have been misunderstood and mis-spelt in Part 2.—On membrane 20 of Part 1 there is an unfinished mandate to H. de Neville, which, being there cancelled, is not to be found on Part 2.—A Liberate Writ, on the same membrane 20, in Part 1, has been left out in Part 2.—On membrane 19 of Part 1 is the Clause of "Hinc mittenda sunt," &c. (one of the best criteria whereby to distinguish the Original from the Copy), which is not inserted in Part 2.—On same membrane 19, Part 1, in a Writ of "Computate," an entire sentence of 33 words is not to be found in Part 2.—On membrane 18, Part 1, a clause in a Writ addressed to the Sheriff of Bedford is omitted in Part 2.—On the same membrane is a Writ of "Computate" for the Bishop of Norwich, which is omitted in Part 2.—On membrane 8, Part 1, another instrument occurs, also omitted in Part 2.—On membrane 6, Part 1, is a long memorandum, which does not appear in Part 2; and there are no less than 12 cancelled instruments on Part 1, which are entirely left out in Part 2.

The foregoing instances are however only a few amongst many which can be produced as proofs of Part 1 not having been copied from Part 2, but the contrary; for, otherwise, if Part 2 be considered as the Original, and Part 1 as the Copy, how are those entire instruments to be accounted for which are to be found in Part 1, but are not noticed in Part 2?

It seems to have been a very early custom in England to make Duplicates or Transcripts of the most valuable Records, doubtless with a view of perpetuating their contents in the event of the Originals being lost or destroyed. Thus it is believed by many, that there were two copies of Domesday Book; one preserved at Westminster, and the other at Winton; several ancient authors having alluded to such copies [1], of which only one is now known to be in existence. Several copies were also made of the Great Charter of Henry I. which he granted at the commencement of his reign, and deposited in the principal monasteries of the Kingdom. The Pipe Rolls of the Exchequer were likewise in duplicate; and Henry II., for still greater security, and to prevent fraud, ordered a third copy to be made of each Roll, which third copy he placed under the direction of Master Thomas Brun.[2] Several copies of Magna Carta are also now known to have been made and deposited in safe custody. The custom of making Copies of the Rolls seems, however, to have fallen into desuetude some time in the 11th year of the reign of Henry III.

CANCELLATIONS, DELETIONS, and INTERLINEATIONS. — Cancellations of whole instruments are very frequent on the early Rolls, and it has been here considered necessary to insert them in their proper places in the text.

The cancelling of the Enrolments of Letters Patent and of Charters, which had passed under the Great Seal, was, according to Lord Coke, 4 Inst. 88., the highest office belonging to the Chancellor's jurisdiction. This dictum of Lord Coke can only, however, be applied to a cancellation by judgment, and not to a cancellation of course; the former of which signifies, that, when Letters Patent or Charters have been adjudged to be void, the Chancellor is the person who condemns and cancels them[1]; and the latter, that when a document has been written on a wrong roll, or entered in a year to which it does not belong, or when the person for whom the writ was intended never received it, the cancellation was made of course, by the person finding out such error, without any other authority.

Cancellations of enrolments, when properly executed, are made by drawing lines through the entry lattice-wise, from whence they take their name; but original instruments are seldom cancelled in that manner. The most usual way of cancelling an original instrument was to make irregular incisures in the parchment, of various forms, transversely through the writing; sometimes in the curvilinear, sometimes in the denticulated, and at other times in an undulated form; but none of these modes are ever adopted in cancellations of enrolments.

There are, indeed, but few instances of enrolments being cancelled without some reason being stated upon the face of the Roll; such as "quia superius," "quia inferius," meaning that the entry cancelled occurred higher up or lower down on the Roll. Again, "quia in Rotulo Finium," "quia in Rotulo Patentium," that is, the same entry belonged to the series of Fine or Patent Rolls, as its nature required, where accordingly it may be found; also "quia non habet" signifies, because the person for whom the writ was intended had never received it.[2] A few instances are, however, to be met with of cancellations without causes assigned; but these are, without exception, the effects of clerical errors, which may be attributed to the clerk, who, in attempting to abstract a mandate, and having probably committed some mistake, thought it better to cancel what he had done, and begin de novo. Sometimes only a sentence, a phrase, or even a word in the middle of an instrument is cancelled on the Rolls.[3]

It has been before observed, that, with the exceptions of merely clerical and literal errors, cancellations of every kind have been carefully noticed: interlineations, and other emendations introduced above deletions, have likewise been marked in the text when written in a different hand to that employed on the rest of the document, or where the colour of the ink does not correspond with that used in the body of the instrument, thereby showing the alterations or interpolations to be of a subsequent period; in all such cases they have been most scrupulously preserved.

[1] The following extract from the Lords Journals, vol. i. pp. 483-4, affords a singular instance of the Lord Chancellor's exercise of his duty in cutting a clause from an act of parliament:

"Die Veneris, videlicet, 4° Januarii, 1 & 2 Ph. & Mary, 1554.

"Hodiè allatæ sunt à Domo Communi tres billæ quarum

"Prima, &c.

"Secunda, &c.

"Tertia, Repealing all statutes, articles, and provisions made against the See Apostolick of Rome since the 20th year of King Henry the Eighth; and for the establishment of all spiritual and ecclesiastical possessions and hereditaments conveyed to the laity; with two new provisoes added thereto by the Commons; and also a request that the two clauses, containing nineteen lines, and concerning the Bishops of London, &c., and the Lords Wentworthe, &c., should be clearly put out. Whereof one of the provisoes, for the manner of the penning thereof, being misliked to the house, another to the same effect was commanded to be drawn, which being three times read, and agreed unto by the whole house, except the Viscount Mountacute and the Bishops of London, Coven', and Lichef', was sent down to the Commons, where being also thrice read and agreed unto, it was brought up again, as an Act fully assented unto by both houses; nor the said nineteen lines were not razed nor taken out of the Act; but the Chancellor, in the sight of all the Lords, with a knife, cut them, saying these words, 'I now do rightly the office of a Chancellor.'"

[2] On the Close Roll of the 12th of Henry III. memb. 3, a document was cancelled, and the reason assigned for its being so is rather curious, "quia Episcopus noluit illud breve inrotulari." Who the Bishop was does not appear, but there is no doubt that it was the Bishop of Chichester, at that time Chancellor; for no Bishop, in his spiritual capacity, could, it is presumed, have had any right to forbid the enrolment of an instrument; and yet if the Chancellor be meant, it seems strange that he should have refused the enrolment in his spiritual and not in his temporal character. At any rate, it argues a power not supposed to exist,—the right of an officer to refuse the just demand of an individual, without a good and sufficient reason assigned for such refusal; and if such reason could have been given, why was the same omitted to be set forth on the Roll?

[3] It may not be known to all, that type used in cancellations is thereby rendered unfit to be employed again, and that this is the case even for cancellation itself, such type being by one operation of this kind completely defaced and destroyed. It is for this reason that the form of cancellation first resorted to in this Volume was afterwards altered. In the beginning of the Work, and at far as page 21, it may be perceived, that the cancellations were made in a manner similar to that in use upon the Roll; but a quantity of type having been thus sacrificed, and great difficulties presenting themselves in accomplishing the task by that mode, without any likelihood of producing ultimate satisfaction, the same was abandoned altogether, and the method adopted which commences at page 21, and which has been subsequently persevered in.

These explanations may appear unnecessary to persons who are not aware of the inferences which are sometimes to be drawn from peculiarities in records; but when it is considered that many important historical facts are dependent upon, and have been established by a nice observance of such points, it must be allowed that a sufficient excuse is presented for the care and labour which have been bestowed upon this Work.

By the laws of the Romans, their scribes were obliged to mention all erasures and interlineations occurring in the manuscript transcribed.[1] That rule has been practised in this as well as in other countries.[2] There are now extant many Charters which notice erasures and interlineations thus, "propriâ manu scripsi unà cum interlineaturis et rasuris factis in dictionibus septem, et de iis mihi constat ad plenum, quia propriâ manu feci."[3] Again, "rasuras factas in octavâ lineâ + sub eodem signo fideliter approbo;"[4] also, "rasura ex auctoritate regiâ, in quartâ lineâ a fine, facta est de præcepto domini cancellarii nobis facto, et ita rasura in originali ibidem."[5] In the Augmentation Office is an original deed containing an erasure, with the following memorandum written at the bottom of it, "illa rasura facta fuit ante consignationem." In a grant also to Catharine Swyneford by John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, there is a clause erased, which is stated to have been done by command of the Duke himself, "de mandato domini."[6]

Three curious examples of the necessity of printing Records in the most literal manner may be stated:

The first of these may be found in an article by Sir Harris Nicolas in the EXCERPTA HISTORICA[7], where the following remarks occur: "It has been generally considered that the instrument by which the Beauforts were legitimated, contains a special exception with respect to the Royal dignity; but a very remarkable fact has been recently discovered on the subject. The Patent, as originally granted, contains no such reservation, nor was it introduced into the copy which was entered on the Rolls of Parliament when it received the sanction of the legislature; but when Henry IV. exemplified and confirmed the grant of Richard II. to the Earl of Somerset, in 1407, the words "excepta dignitate regali" appear to have been added to the enrolment of the grant on the Patent Roll, for those words occur on it as an interlineation, and, from the difference in the colour of the ink, are presumed to have been inserted at a subsequent period, though the hand is very nearly the same. In the exemplification by Henry IV., in 1497, the words are inserted, and the following explanation of the circumstance is probably not far from the truth. Henry IV. was the son of John of Gaunt, and finding that the grant to his father's children, by Catharine Swyneford, might authorize them to assert a claim to the throne on the failure of his own issue, as representatives of the line of Lancaster, probably thought it prudent to prevent such an occurrence, by assuming a power which would now be held illegal, of adding a reservation to the grant of his predecessor, and obliging one of the grantees to receive a confirmation of that grant with the exception introduced into it, as if it had formed part of the original document. It escaped Henry, however, that the grant had become an act of Parliament; and even if he had a right of his own authority to qualify a former grant, he could not interpolate a statute; so that, in a legal view, the addition to the Patent of the 20th of Richard II. on the Patent Roll is of no effect."

The next instance, in confirmation of the necessity of noticing most of the peculiarities in Diplomas, occurs in a work which has just appeared, on the subject of the ancient dependency of Scotland upon England[8]; wherein the Author, Mr. Allen, has established the fact for which he contends, namely, "the non-dependence of that kingdom upon England." In discussing that point, Mr. Allen brings forward an interesting piece of evidence of the artifice of Edward I., who, at the sacrifice of honesty and good faith, ordered an erasure to be made on the Roll [1], and clearly had something inserted which was not previously there.

The last of the three instances alluded to is a mistake into which Dr. Lingard has been betrayed by the omission of Rymer, who certainly did not always attend with sufficient care to the peculiarities of Records. That Historian, in an elaborate discourse on the impropriety of placing faith in the attestations of diplomas, mentions two writs, tested at different places, by Richard II., on the same day. "In April 1399 (says he), Richard II., with his army, was on his road to Ireland.[2] On the 27th of that month we have a writ, Teste Rege, at BRISTOL, where he really was; and another, on the same day, Teste Rege, at WESTMINSTER, where the Chancellor was;" and for this he quotes Rymer, tom. 8, p. 81. This has the appearance of authority, which seems at first sight unassailable. On reference, however, to the Patent Roll of the 22d Richard II., Part 3, m. 26, from which Rymer has printed the document in question, these words appear in the margin, "VAC' Q' AL' IN A° XXj°., which entirely destroy the inference drawn by the Historian, and show that the entry upon which he relies was cancelled; and for the reason that it properly belonged to the preceding year. Upon the Roll for that year the same is to be found[3], and consequently its being recorded again on the Roll for the year succeeding was a mistake. It is not here intended to cast a shadow of blame upon Dr. Lingard on account of this error into which he has unconsciously fallen; for it must not be expected that such men as Dr. Lingard can spare the time, or submit with patience to the drudgery, of wading through dust and cobwebs for hours, and sometimes days, in examining records, for the purpose of arriving at facts which ought to have been prepared ready for their hands.

[2] Here Doctor Lingard is in error, for Richard II. was at Westminster from the 1st day of April 1399 until the 23d of the same month. On that day the King went to Windsor Castle, where he remained till the 25th of April, whence he returned to Westminster, and stayed there until the 1st of the next month, May, on which day he left London, on the Irish expedition so fatal to him. His route, as collected from attestations on the Close and Patent Rolls, was as follows:

[3] Rot. Pat. 21 Ric. II. p. 3. m. 1. The document in question is a grant of an annuity of 100 marks to Sir Walter Styward of Scotland and Isabella his wife, at the end of which is the following notice:—"Et memorandum quod Dominus Rex concessit istam annuitatem die Mercurii proximo ante Dominicam in Ramis Palmarum anno regni ipsius Regis vicesimo primo &c. Et præcepit idem Dominus Rex Magistro Edmundo Stafford Episcopo Exon. cancellario suo ut litteras patentes faceret præfatis Waltero et Isabellæ super annuitate prædicta in forma prædicta."

The enrolment of this patent is attested at Bristol on the 27th of April, which is evidently a clerical error, as the above memorandum proves. Palm Sunday in the year 1398 fell on the 31st day of March, and the Wednesday next before was of course the 27th, on which day the King was at BRISTOL, on his route to London from Shrewsbury, where he had been holding a parliament, the sessions of which began 29th January 1398.

The clerk in Chancery did not, as it seems, receive the Chancellor's order to issue the patent until the end of Richard's 21st regnal year, for it is almost the last instrument on the Rolls of that year. The whole membrane upon which this patent is entered exhibits no little confusion as to dates, and it is not one mistake alone which the enrolling clerk has evidently committed. In the instance here quoted he has substituted April for March.

PLAN OF THIS PUBLICATION.

It is here seen that so simple, and, as it might seem at first sight to some persons, so unimportant a matter as the mere "Teste" of a writ is often of the utmost consequence, and that in many cases, by the means of attestations, circumstances and occurrences transmitted to posterity by our ancient chroniclers and historians may be verified.

On the subject of attestations, as affecting historical data, it is necessary to enter into some further explanation. Excepting in cases of mere clerical inaccuracy, which can always be detected by an inspection of the writs preceding and following, the attestation of a Charter, of a Letter Patent, or of a Letter Close may always be relied upon as the best evidence of where the King was on any particular day. This remark applies until about the reign of Richard II.; but after that period this rule must not be implicitly confided in, and for this reason, that the Court of Chancery in the preceding reign had become stationary, no longer following in attendance upon the person of the King; and even in the reign of Richard II. it often happened that a writ which had passed for some weeks under the Privy Seal, owing to some fortuitous occurrence, did not find its way into Chancery immediately; and many letters issued in one month are found to have been enrolled in the following, most commonly, however, bearing their proper date in the enrolment; but then there are many instances where the clerk has erroneously dated the enrolment of such letters, as of the day upon which he enrolled them, instead of the day upon which they were officially issued. This occasioned in after times no little confusion, which the Stat. 18 Henry VI. cap. 1. was made to rectify, by enacting "That of every warrant hereafter sent to the Chancellor of England, the day of the date of the delivery of the same to the Chancellor shall be entered of record in the Chancery, and that the Chancellor do cause Letters Patent to be made upon the same warrant, bearing date the day of the said delivery into Chancery, and not before, in anywise." From that time, therefore, this statute prevents reliance upon the attestations of writs on the Rolls in evidence of the place where the King was at any given time. Neither can it be admitted that JUDICIAL WRITS are evidence of the King's presence, as they are not intended to convey any such idea.

Of the peculiar interest which sometimes attaches to matters of this nature, it may be adduced as an instance, that by the attestation of a writ we are assured of the fact, that King John was personally present at Rouen[1] on the very day whereon Prince Arthur is said to have disappeared from thence, and, according to the opinions of most writers, was murdered by his uncle[2]; nor can it be denied, that the circumstance of his being actually there in person at that very time, does certainly sanction the traditional and historical belief generally entertained on that subject.

MARGINAL NOTES.—The Marginal Notes on the earlier Close Rolls of the reign of John, being but comparatively few, are in the beginning of this Volume printed in italics, upon the spaces which separate the documents from each other. This plan was originally fixed upon for the purpose of saving the additional cost of printing them in the margin, but as towards the close of the reign they were found to occur more frequently, a new method was pursued, as at page 204, where such notes will be seen for the first time inserted in italics, at the beginning of each document. As, however, a disagreeable effect, and some degree of confusion to the eye, was produced by this arrangement, at the commencement of the reign of Henry III. a brace or bracket was added thereto, which renders the whole completely clear and intelligible, and removes all possibility of confounding such marginal references with the text. Wherever such notices contain the particular reason for which an instrument was cancelled, they are placed immediately after the entry so cancelled, and are printed in italics.

On account of the confused appearance which would have arisen from placing words or symbols of this form, 9t°[3], on the spaces between the documents, it was considered best to dispose of them in this Work immediately after the entries to which they relate. This plan has removed much of the deformity which would otherwise have offended the eye, and has been persisted in to the end of the Volume.

The peculiar appearance of the marginal notes, corroborated by other evidence, seems to imply that they were not written at the same time with the entries to which they refer; though in all probability not later than six months afterwards. It is not unlikely, when the estreating clerk examined the Roll for the purpose of extracting the documents of a fiscal nature, (in the ordinary performance of his duty to send copies of the same to the Exchequer,) that he then made these marginal notes, as guides, for his own convenience.

PLAN OF THIS PUBLICATION.

ATTESTATIONS.—Before any Royal Charters or Letters, whether Patent or Close, become operative, it is requisite to their validity, that the Great Seal of England should be attached to them; and it was one of the principal duties of the Chancellor, in all cases, to affix the same[1]; for, until that act is performed, the instrument is wholly ineffective; and even if the Privy Seal directing such Letters Patent to issue be not followed by the Patent itself in the life-time of the grantee, the authority for creating such Letters Patent becomes inoperative. But, before the act of sealing took place, the Chancellor necessarily required some proof of the authenticity of the order he received, as an indemnity for his act of ratification, and that he might know to whom to refer. This, it is submitted, is the reason of the appearance of so many other attestations besides those of the Sovereign, which are found to have been in use throughout the reign of King John and during the minority of King Henry III. Those persons, however, whose names appear as subscribing witnesses were generally persons high in authority, or holding some important trust in the Royal household. According to the nature of the mandate, so we find the attestation. Juridical mandates were attested by the King or the High Justiciary; and mandates relating to the economy of the Royal household were either witnessed by the King, the Chamberlain, the Steward, or by the chief of the department to which the document more especially related; but during these early periods no certain rule can be laid down. At the close of many of the documents are memoranda, such as per Radulphum Clericum, per Petrum de Rupibus, &c., meaning that those persons had given the instructions to the Chancellor, who thereupon issued precepts, whether Close or Patent, as the case required. Per breve signifies that the instructions given were by letter; per ipsum Regem, that the order was given by the King himself, verbally; per eundem, per eosdem, that the same person or persons who attested the mandate had also given the order.

The Kings of England, previous to the accession of the House of Plantagenet, seldom performed the act of attesting their own diplomas, and when they did so, it was according to no fixed rule. Sometimes, in confirmation of the act, they made the sign of a cross before their names; and sometimes they abstained from taking any active part in the ratification, otherwise than by their presence; the usual ratification being generally made either by one, two, three, or more witnesses, as Teste, Galfrido de Bosco, &c., or Hiis testibus[2], or Testibus, Willielmo Archiep'o Ebor', Johanne de Segrave, &c. Sometimes the Chancellor was the only attesting witness. But it was not until the reign of Richard I. that the Kings of England generally attested their own diplomas.

Henry II. was the first who introduced into a royal diploma the formule of Teste meipso. The introduction of this formule into English diplomas has been attributed to Richard I. by Mabillon[3] and other diplomatic writers. But the erudite Authors of the Nouveau Traité have clearly proved that Henry II.[4] often used it; and, indeed, they give an instance of the use of the same by Henry I.[5]

---

[1] The practice of giving authority to diplomas by seal is supposed to have been introduced into England by Edward the Confessor, he having learnt the same from his cousin William Duke of Normandy, during a visit to the latter. Nevertheless it does not appear to have been generally adopted in England until after the Norman Conquest; though Sir Edward Coke, 1 Inst. 7. imagines authenticating by seal to be of greater antiquity. But the instances he produces of Rex Edwin, in 956, viz. Ego Edwinus, &c. meum donum proprio SIGILLO CONFIRMAVI, and Ego Elfwinus Winton' ecclesiæ Divinus speculator proprium SIGILLUM IMPRESSI, cannot be relied upon as warranting such a conclusion, the word SIGILLUM, before the Conquest, having been used in the same sense with SIGNUM. On this subject, vide Spelman, sub vocibus sigillum and signum, and Madox, Formulare Anglicanum Diss. 27. The celebrated charter of Offa, under seal, preserved in the Royal Library at Paris, is by many persons supposed to be a counterfeit or forgery. The opinion, however, that the use of seals in confirming charters was introduced in this country by the Confessor seems to be somewhat shaken by a recent discovery, made by some workmen whilst digging a bank near Winchester, of a seal bearing the inscription "Sigillum Ælfrici Al." and supposed to have belonged to Alfric Earl of Mercia, who flourished in the reign of King Ethelred.

[2] The phrase of Hiis testibus in royal diplomas is peculiar to that species designated as charters, and continued to be the ratifying formule until charters were merged into letters patent in the 12th year of the reign of James I.

[5] Nouveau Traité, tom. v. p. 829. There is on the Patent Roll, 20 Edw. IV. part 1. m. 4., an inspeximus charter of this King, confirming a charter said to be granted to the Priory of Armethwayt by William the Conqueror, where the formule "Teste meipso" occurs. No one, however, who has any skill in documentary evidence, can fail to perceive instantly that Edward had confirmed a direct forgery, for who can produce an original charter of the Conqueror worded in the style of the one referred to?

The formule of Teste meipso, peculiar to the English diplomas, has been used by the Kings of England from that period to the present. The same formule appears also, by the enrolments, to have been used by the High Justiciary of England; but the Editor has seen only one original mandate, and that a judicial writ, wherein the clause "Teste meipso" is to be found; and if an opinion founded upon a solitary instance may be regarded, it is submitted, that in most of the instances where this formule has been inserted, it has been done by clerical inadvertence; for in an original precept, where the attesting clause is Teste G. Fil' Petri Justic' Angl', the enrolment of the same precept is erroneously written "Teste meipso;" and as one instance of an error can be produced, it is not unfair to assume that similar inaccuracies might have been committed upon other occasions.

The anomaly of using the words Rex, &c. and Teste meipso may be considered as an additional evidence of the want of accuracy in the enrolling clerks. Throughout the reign of John nearly all the documents are abbreviated at their commencement, and the style and titles of the King either curtailed or excluded, the words REX, &c. being substituted. The clerk, however, not adhering to any uniformity in his abbreviations, has in many instances committed a grammatical error, by neglecting to make a corresponding change in the attestation to agree with the address: thus, in those documents tested by the King, he has preserved the Teste meipso instead of Teste Rege, whereby the first part of the document is in the third person, whilst the conclusion is in the first.

The formule of Teste Rege has caused much discussion amongst diplomatic writers, both English and foreign, which has been owing to their not properly understanding that clause.[1] Mabillon, and 1 "La Formule Teste Rege qui termine les lettres patentes des Rois d'Angleterre, est quelquefois exprimée par ces deux siglis, T. R. Les actes de Henri III. finissent encore par 'Teste meipso apud Westmonasterium, 19 die Octobris.'" Nouv. Traité, tom. vi. page 32.

"Les Rois d'Angleterre se donnent eux seuls, ou l'un de leurs officiers, pour témoins dans leurs mandemens et leurs chartes peu importantes. La formule Teste meipso est ordinairement jointe à la date; mais le sceau, qui seul donne l'autenticité à ces lettres royaux, n'est point anoncé. Le recueil de Rymer fournit une multitude de pièces en cette forme. Mais les traités et les actes de conséquence sont attestés par un nombre de témoins, dont les noms précédés de la formule 'Testibus, &c.' Jean Sans-terre anonce de plus sa bulle d'or dans l'acte, par lequel, comme vassal, il fait hommage avec serment au Pape Innocent III. après avoir remis sa couronne entre les mains de Pandolfe, legat du S. Siège. Henri III. se sert de la formule suivante, où il n'est point parlé du sceau royal: 'In cujus rei testimonium has litteras nostras vobis mittimus patentes.'" Nouv. Traité, tom. vi. page 21.

"Edward IV. premier Roi d'Angleterre de la maison d'York couronné à Westminster le 20 Juin 1461, commence souvent ses diplomes par ces formules: 'Rex omnibus ad quos præsentes, &c. salutem. Sciatis quod, &c. Rex ad perpetuam rei memoriam.' Edouard V. proclamé Roi d'Angleterre l'an 1483 emploie le même style: 'Rex omnibus ad quos, &c. salutem. Sciatis quod de gratiâ nostrâ speciali, ac ex certâ scientiâ et mero motu nostris concessimus, &c. Dat. nostro sub privato sigillo apud Turrim nostram Londoniæ, duodecimo die Junii, anno regni nostri primo.'" Nouv. Traité, tom. vi. page 87.

PLAN OF THIS PUBLICATION.

the Authors of the Nouveau Traité, assert that some of the English Monarchs, amongst their various modes of attestation, used the formule Teste Rege. Rymer's Fœdera and the diplomatic treatises of other English antiquaries have been the means of betraying these authors into this mistake; for which no blame ought to be attached to them, since they had not the opportunity of obtaining access to the original instruments. The occasion of their error is easily explained. All original documents commence with the name, style, and title of the Sovereign, as Henricus, Dei gratiâ, Rex Angliæ, Dominus Hiberniæ, Dux Normanniæ, Aquitaniæ, et Comes Andegaviæ. The enrolling clerks or chancery scribes, either with a view of saving their own labour or the skins upon which they wrote, (for they were obliged to procure the latter themselves,[1]) instead of writing the King's name and titles at full length, contented themselves with introducing the same into the first entry on the Roll[2] only, and afterwards with limiting all the subsequent entries to Rex, &c. To make the concluding part of the document agree with the commencement, they substituted the formule Teste Rege for Teste meipso; yet, strange as it may appear, the form of the rest of the instrument was suffered to remain unaltered, and consequently was not in accordance with the previous changes: since the document began and ended in the third, whilst the body of the same was expressed as in the first person[3], as Rex, &c., concessimus, &c., Teste Rege. This fact is unnoticed by Rymer, Madox, or Casley; and it is therefore not surprising that foreign diplomatists should have been mislead, when it is considered that the only data from which they drew their conclusions were selected from the Fœdera and the Monasticon, the Editors of which two works have not made a distinction between Original Instruments and their Enrolments.

ABBREVIATIONS.—Without some explanation of the Abbreviations used in this work, Readers in general would find great difficulty in understanding many of the entries; especially as the ancient style of punctuation rather obscures than elucidates the construction. A few general rules are therefore indispensable for the assistance of those who wish to acquire a knowledge of this peculiar species of literature. A Table will also be given of the Abbreviations of such words as invariably occur in one form.

The most usual mode of abbreviating words is to retain some of the letters of which such words consist, and to substitute certain marks or symbols in place of those left out.

The Abbreviations most common are a right line thus (–), and a curve, approaching the form of the Greek circumflex accent, thus (~), placed horizontally over a letter. The first of these marks, over a vowel, in the middle or at the end of a word, denotes that one letter is wanting, as in vēdāt for vendant, bonū for bonum, terrā for terram, &c.; and the latter, when seen above or through a letter, either in the middle or at the end of a word, signifies the omission of more than one letter; but the number of letters wanted is left to be ascertained by the Reader, as in aĩa for anima, aĩr for aliter, aĩia for animalia, ablac̃o for ablatio, Wintoñ for Wintonia, noƀ for nobis, manƌ for mandatum, &c. A straight line through a consonant also denotes the omission of one or more letters, as in voƀ for vobis, qƌ for quod, &c.

Several symbols have positive and fixed significations. Thus, the character ꝛ always stands for er or re, as the sense requires, as ꝛra for terra, p̃dictus for prædictus.[4]

A straight or a curved line through the letter p thus ꝑ ꝓ, stands for per, por, and par. The curved line through the same letter ꝓ denotes pro.

This character ȝ, at the end of a word, signifies us, as omnibȝ for omnibus, and likewise et, as debȝ for debet.

The figure ꝝ, represents rum, ras, res, ris, and ram, as eoꝝ for eorum, libꝝ for libras or libris, Windesoꝝ for Windesores, Alienoꝝ for Alienoram, añcessoꝝ for antecessorum and antecessoris.

[1] "Scriptor iste de proprio an de fisco Rotulos invenit?" asks the scholar in the Dialogus de Scaccario, to which the master answers; "In termino iste Sancti Michaelis 5 solidos de fisco recipit, et scriptor Cancellariæ alios nihilominus 5 ex quibus ad utrumque Rotulum, et ad summonitiones ad receptas inferioris Scaccarii membranas inveniunt."

[2] This was not a universal, although a general custom.

[3] King Richard the First was the first English Monarch who adopted the plural number, Nos. His predecessors used the first person singular, Ego. RUDDIMAN, in the preface to Anderson's "Selectus Diplomatum et Numismatum Scotiæ Thesaurus," p. 31, on the question whether the diploma whereby Malcomb did homage to Edward the Confessor be not spurious, advances in proof of its being a forgery, "Quòd in hoc Milcolumbus, de se loquens, plurali numero utatur, qui mos nondum apud Angliæ aut Scotiæ Reges erat introductus: inter Anglos quippe Ricardus I. inter Scotos verò Alexander II.; qui pluralem de se solis loquentes adhibuerint, primi reperiuntur; quorum utrumque Milcolumbus 3 centum minimum annos præcessit." Nicholson, author of the English Historical Library, part 3, page 2, is of opinion, that King John was the first English Monarch who used the plural number: this opinion, however, is contradicted by the existence of several original charters of King Richard I. wherein that Sovereign makes use of the plural number throughout, except in his attestation.

[4] The diphthong was not in use at this period, but sometimes at the end of a word is represented by a character similar to the French ç; thus, terre for terræ.

Etiam is thus denoted &, and que, quia, and quod thus q$_{\overline{3}}$.

The character represented in type by the figure of 9, is sometimes called the c cursive, or c reversed. When found at the commencement of a word this character signifies com or con, as 9mitto for committo, 9victo for convicto ; but placed in the middle or at the end of a word, a little out of the line, it signifies us, as De^{9} for Deus, reb^{9} for rebus, Aug^{9}ti for Augusti. It also occasionally stands for ost and os, as p^{9} p^{9}t for post, and p^{9}quam for postquam.

The word est is abridged either by a horizontal line or by the Greek circumflex accent between two points thus ÷, ÷.

Points or Dots, placed after letters, are also signs of abbreviations, as di. et fi. for dilectus et fidelis, e. for est, plurib. for pluribus.[1]

Two points, thus (··) or (″), serve as marks of transposition, as ″ Magnus ″ Albertus, for Albertus Magnus.

For the word et is substituted a character thus ⁊.[2]

A small superior letter denotes an omission, of which such letter forms a part, as over p^{i}us for prius, t^{i} for tibi, q^{o}s for quos, q^{i} for qui, &c.

Xp̃s, Xp̃c, Xp̃o, Xp̃i, all stand for Christus, and its different cases.[3]

[1] A point placed under a letter shows that such letter is redundant. It was a very common mode of making a deletion of a letter, or of a word, instead of disfiguring the face of the document with obliterations.

[2] In very early times it was represented by a figure something resembling the numeral 7, thus, 7.

[3] In sacred words the Latins retained the Greek letters. Jesus is generally written IHΣ or ιῆς, abbreviations of ιησους ; IS, $\widetilde{\text{IS}}$, for Christus, &c.

COURTS OF LAW.

COURTS OF LAW.

BEFORE it is attempted to show in what manner ancient and modern laws may be illustrated by instruments in this Volume, it is desirable to take a short view of the constitution of different Courts of Judicature existing at the period to which such instruments refer.

The permanent Courts of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction were the Aula or Curia Regis [1], which afterwards became the modern King's Bench [2] — the Court of Common Pleas [3] — the itinerant Courts of

---

[1] The primitive signification of the words "Curia Regis" was the Hall or Court of the King's Palace, where he convened his subjects for the discussion of public affairs. It was afterwards used to denote the meetings there convened. All assemblies there held, whether for legislative or judicial purposes, also bore that designation. It does not seem, however, to be confined to the limited signification assigned to it by some, as being merely the King's Select Council, or Supreme Court of Justice. All national councils, whether convoked for justice or advice, were styled the Curia Regis; even in the reign of Henry II., who is supposed to have been the original institutor of this high court of justice, which he ordered to be holden within, or rather to be a component part of it.

[2] "Habet Rex plures curias in quibus diversæ actiones terminantur, et illarum curiarum habet unam propriam, sicut Aulam Regiam, et justitiarios capitales qui proprias causas regias terminant, et aliorum omnium per querelam, vel per privilegium, seu libertatem." Bract. lib. iii. cap. 7. fol. 105 b.

[3] "Habet Rex etiam curiam, et justitiarios in banco residentes, qui cognoscant de omnibus placitis de quibus aucthoritatem habent cognoscendi, et sine warranto jurisdictionem non habent nec coertionem." Bract. lib. vii. fol. 105 b.

the Justices in Eyre[1] — the Court of Chancery — the Court of Exchequer[2] — and the ancient County and other Anglo-Saxon Courts. These courts, with the exception of those of Anglo-Saxon foundation, which were falling rapidly into comparative desuetude, formed component parts of the primitive Curia Regis, from which they had just been separated. The reason of the division of the Curia Regis into separate courts seems to have been owing to the extensive jurisdiction which this supreme court had acquired, and which became inconvenient and oppressive: the necessities which induced such division will be obvious on considering its legislative and juridical powers.[3]

Courts of Law.

In the Curia Regis were discussed and tried all pleas immediately concerning the King and the Realm; and suitors were allowed, upon payment of fines, to remove their plaints from inferior jurisdictions of Anglo-Saxon creation into this court, by which a variety of business was wrested from the ignorance and partiality of lower tribunals, to be more confidently submitted to the decision of judges of high reputation. Some plaints were also removed into the Curia Regis by the express order of the King; others by the justices itinerant, who not unfrequently felt themselves incompetent to decide upon difficult points of law. Matters of a fiscal nature, together with the business performed by the Chancery, were also transacted in the Curia Regis. Such a quantity of miscellaneous business was at length found to be so perplexing and impracticable, not only to the officers of the Curia Regis, but also to the suitors themselves, that it became absolutely necessary to devise a remedy for the increasing evil. A division of that court into distinct departments was the consequence, and thenceforth pleas touching the Crown, together with common pleas[4] of a civil and criminal nature, were continued to the Curia Regis; plaints of a fiscal kind were transferred to the Exchequer; and for the Court of Chancery were reserved all matters unappropriated to the other courts.

Equitable Jurisdiction.

Equitable Jurisdiction.—The origin of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery as a court of equity still remains in comparative obscurity. Much has, indeed, been written on the subject; but little in reality has been done towards a satisfactory settlement of that question. The nature and limits of this Introduction do not admit of many details on the point; nor is this a proper place for the institution of inquiries relative to the first introduction and gradual rise of all and each of the vast and extraordinary powers of the present Court of Chancery, branching, as they do, into jurisdictions so various and extensive. It is here proposed only to take a cursory view of its history as a court of equity; suggesting to those who wish for information on the subject some of the sources from which materials may be collected for the purpose, without entering into an investigation of the peculiarities which distinguish it from a court of common law.

The Court of Chancery, as a court of equity began to decide causes about the reign of Edward the Third, and continued to do so for at least three centuries, "secundum æquum et bonum," and not according to precise and predetermined rules (as is now the practice of that Court[5]), for neither Glanville, the Mirror, Bracton, Briton, Fleta, nor the "Diversite des Courtes," ever allude to it as a court of equity.[6] The earliest mention of a distinction betwixt equity and common law is believed to be in Bracton, lib. ii. c. 7., where that writer places equity in contra-distinction to strict law; but in Glanville, who preceded him some years, there is not the remotest allusion to any thing of the kind. The fountain of justice and equity was, in his as in all preceding time, held to be in the Sovereign, who took an oath at the coronation to dispense to his subjects æquam et rectam justitiam; that is, the King bound himself to distribute to every individual in his realm both justice and equity, or as it is more commonly expressed, to temper justice with mercy. But this, in all cases, and in his own proper person, it was obviously impossible for him to do; he, therefore, of necessity, was obliged to [3] The division of the Curia Regis is believed to have taken place at the latter end of the reign of King Richard I. See note [7] at p. vii. of this Introduction.

[4] The Court of Common Pleas was by the xvij. chapter of Magna Carta separated from the Curia Regis and made stationary: "communia placita non sequantur curiam nostram sed teneantur in aliquo certo loco." See 2 Inst. 22. Madox's Hist. of Excheq. Spelm. Glos. Tit. Justitiarius.

La cour etant encore dans son enfance, les debats judiciaires n'avaient point produit ce recueil de règles et de decisions qui aujourd'hui doivent guider les juges dans leurs arrêts, et dont l'étude et la pleine connaissance leur sont indispensables. Les Chanceliers de cette époque etaient encore libres de décider les causes suivant les principes de l'équité naturelle; car ce n'est que dans le milieu du dix-septième siècle que les maximes et usages des tribunaux d'équité commencèrent à devenir une science." Lettres sur la Cour de la Chancellerie d'Angleterre, et sur quelques points de la Jurisprudence Anglaise, pp. 62—72. *Par C. delegate the administration of justice, in various departments, to ministers and officers chosen and deputed by him to fulfil the duties respectively belonging to each of such departments, but whose powers and modes of practice were defined and circumscribed within the limits of positive and admitted laws and regulations. Hence arose the necessity and formation of separate and distinct courts of law, which, by degrees, were brought into use, and which, in the King's name, and by his authority, dispensed justice to the people, according to existing laws. But inasmuch as enacted and positive laws must in their nature be limited either to general maxims, or to provisions adapted and applicable only to particular circumstances, there could not but happen, in almost constant succession, a variety of cases so new and unforeseen in their bearing and construction as to admit of no proper or adequate remedies being applied to them by these ordinary courts, if they proceeded according to the existing and established law, the rigor of which was found to operate in a manner both oppressive and unjust. It was therefore necessary, in many instances, to have recourse to the King, who being the fountain both of justice and equity, had the power of affording relief in all such difficulties, according as it might appear to him to be reasonable, just, and merciful.[1] This leads to considerations of the common modes of administering justice during the period to which this Volume especially refers, in order to trace the gradual steps of equitable jurisdiction which were trodden first by the King himself, in his character of dispenser of justice.

Antecedent to the reign of Henry II. the administration of justice had been permitted to flow through many different channels; for instance, through those of the County Courts, of the Hundred Courts, and of the Courts Baron. So many courts of judicature (though one of the great excellencies of Anglo-Saxon contrivance, inasmuch as justice might thus be said to be rendered almost at the door of every member of the community) were nevertheless unsuitable to the habits and prejudices of the Norman invaders, accustomed as the latter were to more imposing forms, and to a species of jurisprudence much more subtle and refined in its distinctions than that in use with the Saxons.

From this multiplicity of judicatures there naturally followed many and great inconveniences, uncertainties, and, in no small number of instances, debasements of the laws, owing equally to the number of tribunals as to the ignorance and partiality of the judges; notwithstanding that the eldermen, from whom such judges were selected, were supposed to be the wisest and most discreet persons of those divisions over which each of them respectively presided. Henry I., however, seeing such inconveniences arise, and such venality in practice, for the purpose of controlling this growing evil, ordained, that not only should the freeholders of the county attend these courts, but that also the bishops, barons, and others of a certain rank residing in the respective districts, should be constant in their attendance at the same. This command was for some time scrupulously obeyed, but, like other salutary regulations, it soon fell into disuse. The consequence of this neglect on the part of the Norman nobility was, that all business of any moment was thenceforth conducted upon principles almost wholly founded in factious and interested motives; and as it often happened that those who presided were in many instances parties as well as judges in their own cause, the decisions of the court were often partial and unjust. All this took place, notwithstanding redress could have been had by obtaining a writ of false judgment before the King or Chief Justiciary, in which case the judgment, if found to be unjust or oppressive, was annulled, reversed, or abated, and the parties found to be in the wrong from such decisions heavily amerced.

This, nevertheless, did not prove to be an effectual and sufficient remedy; and other measures were taken, in the year 1176[2], to put a stop to such irregular and nefarious proceedings; when men, versed and experienced in the laws and constitution of the realm, were appointed as itinerant justices[3], to go on circuits through every part of the kingdom, and to hear and determine pleas, as

[1] " Il n'y a pas de doute que la juridiction exercée maintenant par le Chancelier pour mitiger la sévérité du droit commun a toujours fait partie de la loi d'Angleterre. Autrefois c'etait le Roi en personne, assisté du Chancelier et d'autres officiers de la couronne, qui exerçait cette juridiction sur la requête des parties, lorsqu'elles réclamaient contre les décisions des juges." Lettres sur la Cour de la Chancellerie d'Angleterre, par C. P. Cooper, p. 182. Paris Edit. 1830.

[2] 22d Henry II.

[3] It must not be inferred that the institution of itinerant justices originated in the Council at Northampton in the year 1176, for there is unquestionable evidence, the Pipe Roll in the Exchequer, that there had been itinerant justices, to hear and determine civil and criminal pleas, in the eighteenth year of the reign of King Henry the First. It is to this monarch that the introduction of such justices into England is to be attributed, consequential to a similar institution in France by Louis le Gros, and imparted by him to King Henry. These justices, however, appear to have been discontinued during the intestine commotions in the reign of King Stephen: the glory, therefore, of fixing in the English constitution so useful an improvement belongs to Henry the Second, by whom it was revived and regularly settled at the Council of Northampton. The error, into which Sir Matthew Hale has fallen, of supposing the original appointment of justices itinerant to have taken place at this Council, seems to have arisen in consequence of their being first mentioned in our ancient chronicles under the year 1176, whereas only a new division of the kingdom into six circuits was then settled, and justices appointed thereto.

well civil and criminal, as pleas of the crown, arising within the several divisions respectively assigned to them.

An ordinance of such importance as this, and emanating from a prince so wise as Henry II., had a direct tendency to restrain the oppressions of the barons, and to protect the gentry and common people in the enjoyment of their rights and liberties; and still, if parties felt themselves aggrieved, either from the rigor or imperfection of the law itself, or by the misjudgment or venality of the itinerant justices, a door was left open for redress, by the removal of their plaints, upon the payment of trifling fines, into the King's Court, where justice with equity was supposed to reside.

The court of judicature which sat in Curia Regis, or the King's Court, is also presumed to have been instituted by the same Prince, in consequence of complaints made to him of the partiality of his Justiciæ resiant in his court; the number of whom he reduced from eighteen to five, and enacted "quod illi quinque audirent omnes clamores regni et rectum facerent; et quod a Curia Regis non recederent, sed ibi ad audiendum clamores hominum remanerent; ita ut, si aliqua quæstio inter eos veniret, quæ per eos ad finem duci non posset; auditui regi præsentaretur, et sicut ei, et sapientioribus regni placeret, terminaretur." [1]

Hence it will appear that not only was a permanent court of justice established in the King's Court, but also that a still higher tribunal was brought into use — that of the King in Council[2], to whom the justices of the first were to appeal in cases of difficulty; and this is presumed to be the first germ or semblance of a court of equity. This Concilium Regis must not, however, be confounded with the Commune Concilium. The business of the former was to assist the King in determining and legislating upon the nicer and more intricate points of law, to guide the opinions and judgment of the Monarch, and to assist him in the performance and discharge of his duties.[3] The latter was the Court de more, held at the three great festivals of the year, composed of "all the great men over all England, archbishops and bishops, abbots and earls, thegns and cniths[4]," an assembly, in fact, the same (with some improvements) as the Saxon Wittenagemote, which made laws and imposed taxes, and advised the King in the administration of justice. This National Assembly or Common Council of the Realm has, it is submitted, been confounded, in a Report made by a Committee of the House of Lords appointed to inquire into the nature and dignity of a Peer of the Realm[5], with the King's Council.[6] That Committee assumes, that the King's Select Council was also the Commune Concilium de more, which assembled, as before stated, three times a year. That each member of the Select Council was, in his individual capacity, also part of the Common Council, will scarcely admit of a doubt; and it is also certain, that the Concilium Regis did not merge into the more numerous assembly, or Commune Concilium, but continued, for upwards of three centuries, a separate and independent body, exercising its judicial and peculiar functions, until the Court of Chancery came, in course of time, to supersede it, from the people finding it more expeditious and satisfactory for them to address their petitions to the Chancellor direct, knowing that to that high officer they would ultimately be referred.

An inspection of the numerous entries relative to this subject, occurring in the Close Rolls, will make this clear, by showing the exact jurisdiction and peculiar functions of the Select Council; viz. that it was always about the King, attended upon him in all his expeditions, and followed him in all his progresses through the kingdom — that petitions were constantly referred to it — that remedies were provided by it, without delay — and that doubtful and intricate points of law were there discussed and determined, without waiting for the stated meetings of the Common Council, or convoking an extraordinary assembly. Such a jurisdiction as is here described would have been not only ill adapted to the constitution, but incompatible with the nature of an assembly like that of the Common Council of the Realm, meeting together but three times a year; but instances of the jurisdiction of the Select Council are, of course, more numerous during the minority of Henry III. than in the reign of his father, and, perhaps, the great influence and positive jurisdiction which it afterwards assumed may have chiefly arisen during Henry's nonage.

Equitable Jurisdiction.

Whenever, then, there appears to have been any difficult point of law, or case which the common law was unable to reach, the same was discussed before and by the Select Council, which, prior to the institution of Parliament, was doubtless the highest tribunal in the kingdom. "There was lodged in it," says Sir Matthew Hale, "the plenitude of all civil jurisdiction."[1] Various entries on the Close Rolls, to be found in this Volume, exhibit convincing proofs of this assertion; for in many instances they show that the Council was possessed of judicial power to order the issuing of writs out of Chancery for the redress of grievances, and that it often commented severely on the decision of other courts; also, that it often proceeded to the execution of justice in the first instance, without the assistance or advice of the other branches of government[2]; and it might well have such absolute and extensive powers of jurisdiction, since, as Sir Matthew Hale says, "it was not only composed of the wisdom of the nation, but also that the great officers of state, the Chancellor, Treasurer, Justices of each Bench, and Barons of the Exchequer were all active members of it, assisting with their knowledge and advice, the less experienced."

The exact jurisdiction of this Council may, however, be pretty well ascertained from several entries on the Close Rolls, and from petitions addressed to it, with the answers of the Council as written on such petitions, of which the originals are still to be found in the Tower; as "sue at Common Law" —"sue in the Exchequer"—"sue in Chancery"—"a writ on the subject shall be dispatched out of Chancery"—"the King will consider"—"a remedy shall be provided," &c.

Here it may be as well to particularize the nature of some of the matters, both of law and fact, of which this Council took cognizance, and to prove that it had a direct jurisdiction over all the proceedings of the courts below[3], with the power of reversing any judgment of those courts founded in error.[4] Of this nature are the following: Whenever the Council thought it expedient to have the advice and assistance of any particular persons, whether barons, bishops, or others, the Chancellor, by order of the Council, issued writs of summons to such persons, according to circumstances[5]; and if any information was required, writs and commissions emanating from the Council were dispatched out of Chancery[6], and the inquisitions made by virtue of such writs being presented to the Council, instructions upon the matter at issue were thereupon delivered, as the case required.[7] Conventions, recognizances, bails, and agreements were also made before the Council.[8] Oaths, vouchers, and protestations were also made before it.[9] Orders for payments of money were issued from it.[10] Judgment was given in matters tried before it upon petition.[11] Persons were ordered to appear before the Council to show why they opposed the execution of the King's precepts; and, so also, persons aggrieved to state their complaints; and the aggressors were commanded to appear and answer the charges preferred against them.[12] On one occasion the Justices in Eyre for the county of Sussex, and the Chancellor, were commanded to put in respite the pleas of the Crown in the Cinque Ports "ut interim provideatur a Concilio Regis ubi et coram quibus placita illa teneri debeant."[13] It is declared by the King that earls and barons should only be amerced before the Council.[14] Justice was dispensed before the Council upon allegations of any violation of a truce[15]; and the

2 The Council had an absolute jurisdiction over all the proceedings pending in the Courts below; wherein if any litigant felt himself aggrieved he applied for redress to the Council, in the same manner as he would have applied to the King, before the latter committed his prerogative of distributing justice and equity to his Council. And here it is to be remarked, that for some time after the authority of the Council had been recognized, petitions still continued to be addressed to the King, as the fountain of justice and equity, but these petitions were all referred to the Council; that assembly handed them over to the Chancellor; "le Chancelier s'etait arrogé le droit de juridiction autrefois reservé au Roi et son conseil *;" and thus the equitable jurisdiction of that high officer of state soon began to be acknowledged, and by degrees, in course of time, to be firmly established.

Council seems to have taken an active part in matters relating to the government and juridical proceedings of Ireland [1], as well as in watching and determining the prerogatives of the Crown.

Sufficient having been said to excite attention to the variety of information to be obtained from the Close Rolls in illustration of the nature of the English Constitution, it now remains only to inquire how the Chancellor came subsequently to exercise that equitable jurisdiction, which it appears, for such a length of time, belonged alone to the Council. In such attempt any thing like an essay on the office and dignity of the Chancellor is far from being meditated: it is merely designed to show how that immense power, which first resided in the breast of the King alone, was afterwards transferred from him to the Council, and eventually from the Council [2] to the Chancellor.

It has been proved, by the passage quoted from Benedict Abbas, at page xxv of this Introduction, that when Henry established a judicial tribunal in the Curia Regis, he reserved to himself the prerogative of finally deciding the law, and of calling to his assistance, when needful, the Concilium sapientium regni. This power was, however, no part of the ambition of some of his successors, whose inclinations and pursuits were directed more to the acquirement of glory by military achievements, than by the exercise of their legislative faculties. The heavy and responsible duties of supreme judge were therefore cheerfully, it may be supposed, resigned to others, who, distinguished for their attainments in learning and general knowledge, were better qualified for a proper discharge of that important office. To the Select Council this trust was confided. The private Confessor [3], Chancellor [4], and the Chief Clerk of the King, would, as may naturally be presumed, be at the head of this learned assembly; and being, at least in the early periods of English history, the King's Confessor, he was deemed to be more intimately acquainted with his inclinations and wishes.[5] Hence he was called the Keeper of the King's conscience.[6] To him, then, the Council Witness ourself at London, on the 12th day of December. Before Hubert de Burgh, Chief Justiciary, and the Bishops of Bath and Salisbury."

In like manner it is written to the other bailiffs named in a schedule attached to the Roll, which also contains the names of those whom the respective bailiffs are to cause to appear at the day aforesaid.

[1] Vide pages 527. 532. 549. 551. 554. 584. 629. For much valuable information relating to the ancient usages and legislative establishments introduced into Ireland, see "A view of the Legal Institutions, Honorary Hereditary Offices and Feudal Baronies established in Ireland, during the reign of Henry the Second," by William Lynch esq. 8vo. 1830.

[2] After the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was established, the ancient Council by degrees became extinct, in consequence of the greater part of its avocations devolving upon the Chancellor. The modern Privy Council appears to have grown out of the Concilium Regis, or ancient Council, about the reign of Richard the Second. No petition, however, at all approximating to the modern form has been found addressed to the Privy Council of so early date as Richard the Second. Elsynge, in his work intituled "The manner of holding Parliaments in England," page 287, says, that in the time of Henry the Fourth there were few petitions directed to the King in Council, but there were some addressed to the King alone. The reason of this is obvious; the ancient Council, as a Court of Equity, had, at that time, almost ceased to exist, or rather it had been superseded by the Privy Council. Petitions were, however, addressed to the King for some time after the Court of Chancery had become a Court of Equity; such petitions were, however, always handed over to the Chancellor to execute.

[3] Though early writers on the office of Chancellor state that he was originally the King's chief Chaplain and Confessor, yet there are no public instruments which confer that title on him. There are, however, several entries on the Parliament Roll relating to the King's Confessor, then evidently distinct from the Chancellor. These entries occur in the reigns of Edward III., Richard II., and Henry IV.

[4] The Chancellor of England at this time had no distinct court of judicature in which he presided, but he acted together with the Justiciary and other great officers, in matters of the revenue, at the Exchequer, and sometimes in the counties, upon circuits. The Great Seal being in his custody, he supervised and sealed the writs and precepts that issued in proceedings pending in the King's Court and in the Exchequer. He also supervised all charters which were to be sealed with that seal. Mr. Madox observes that he was usually a bishop or prelate, because he was looked upon as chief of the King's chapel *, which was under his special care. In the Council his rank was very high; it seems that he had the principal direction and conduct of all foreign affairs, performing most of that business which is now done by the secretaries of state.

* Anciently public archives were preserved in churches and other religious places. The Greeks paid particular attention to the conservation of their records. The temple of Delos was, according to Pausanias, the general repository of records; and part of the Areopagus and the temple of Minerva were also devoted by the Athenians for the custody of their public instruments. (Reflexions sur l'Etude de l'ancienne Histoire, tom. viii. p. 260.) The Romans were not less zealous in the preservation of their records than the Greeks, and their most precious archives were deposited in their temples. (Eckhard Schediasma de Tabular. Antiq. n. xvi. p. 25.) This custom of preserving records in sacred places was followed in the middle ages, and it is not improbable that the King's chapel was used for that purpose, and hence it was that the Chancellor, as presiding over the royal chapel, came to be so much connected with royal diplomas and archives. "Fungebantur antiquè Cancellariatus dignitate, viri tantum Ecclesiastici et Episcopi, qui præterea curam gerebant Regiæ capellæ, repositaque illic monumenta (rotulos et recorda vocant) sacrâ custodiâ tuebantur." "Cancellarii dignitas est, ut secundus à Rege in regno habeatur, ut altera parte sigilli regii (quod et ad ejus pertinet custodiam) propria signet mandata, ut capella Regia in illius sit dispositione et cura." *Spelm. properly applied for aid, instruction, and advice upon any occasion of severity or defect in the law; and here may be perceived the origin of one of the principal employments of the Chancellor, that of providing remedies for grievances not cognizable by statute or common law; or which grew out of new or peculiar circumstances, to which neither the one nor the other was altogether applicable.[1] In order to obtain relief in such cases recourse was had to a petition to the King, which was commonly directed to him in Council; but to investigate and decide upon such petitions occasioned an overwhelming weight of business. To remedy which, an ordinance was made in the eighth year of the reign of Edward I.[2], wherein (after reciting that great inconveniences had arisen from the multitude of petitions laid before the King, the greatest part whereof might be dispatched by the Chancellor and the justices,) it was ordered, that all petitions, prior to their being presented to the Council, should first be discussed before each of the judicial officers at the head of that department to which those petitions respectively and properly belonged; and if the matter were of such importance, or of grace and favour, so that the Chancellor and others could not administer relief without the King, that then such petitions should be brought before the King in Council, by the hands of the Chancellor, to abide his (the King's) and their decision.[3]

Thus it is evident that to the Chancellor had already been assigned the important duty of attending to and judging of the merit of petitions. That he was always attendant on the King is proved by the statute 28th Edward I. c. 5., ordaining that the Chancellor and other wise men of the law should always be near the King[4], to assist him with their advice in cases of difficulty and need. When, therefore, the Court of Chancery ceased to be ambulatory, (which was in the commencement of the reign of Edward the Third,) and became fixed in a settled and appointed place, the King and his Council, from that time, were necessarily deprived of the ready and immediate assistance of the Chancellor, who had theretofore taken such an active and important part in advising on and devising remedies for such causes of complaint as were laid before them.[5] The Council was consequently obliged, from that time forward, in cases of need, to send to the Chancellor; and hence it is, that after this period the petitions are often indorsed with the answer of the Council, expressed thus, "Adeat in Cancellaria" "Sequatur in Cancellaria."

The commencement of the Chancellor's separate and independent equitable jurisdiction most probably took place about the 22d year of the reign of Edward III.[6] A writ addressed to the sheriffs of London, entered on the Close Rolls, as of that year, p. 2. m. 2. in dorso, is almost conclusive on this point: "Rex Vicecomitibus London. salutem. Quia circa diversa negotia nos et statum regni nostri Angliæ concernentia sumus indies multipliciter occupati, Volumus quod quilibet negotia tam communem legem regni nostri Angliæ quam gratiam nostram specialem concernentia penes nosmetipsos habens exnunc prosequenda, eadem negotia, videlicet, negotia AD COMMUNEM LEGEM penes venerabilem virum electum Cantuariensem confirmatum Cancellarium nostrum, per ipsum expedienda, et alia negotia DE GRATIA NOSTRA CONCEDENDA penes eundem Cancellarium, seu dilectum clericum nostrum custodem sigilli nostri privati prosequantur; ita quod ipsi vel eorum alter petitiones negotiorum quæ per eos, nobis inconsultis, expediri non poterunt, una cum avisamentis suis inde ad nos transmittant vel transmittat, absque alia prosecutione penes nos inde facienda, ut hiis inspectis ulterius præfato Cancellario, seu custodi inde significemus velle nostrum; et quod nullus alius hujusmodi negotia penes nosmetipsos de cætero prosequatur, vobis præcipimus quod statim visis præsentibus præmissa omnia et singula in Civitate prædicta in locis ubi expedire videritis publice proclamari faciatis in forma prædicta. Et hoc nullatenus omittatis. Teste Rege apud Langele xxiiij. die Januarii. per ipsum Regem."

The words "et alia negotia de gratia nostra concedenda penes eundem Cancellarium" seem to have first laid the basis on which the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was built, for previously the granting of matters of grace and favour was peculiar to the King alone[7]; but this

[1] From the Court of Chancery issue, not only mandatory and remedial writs, but also original writs. The latter were contrived or adapted to the special case of the suitor, and upon these were founded the proceedings of the King's Bench and Common Pleas. Many other writs, relative to suits commenced or depending in other courts, issue out of this court, many of which are not returnable into Chancery.

enabled the Chancellor to proceed in suits "secundum æquum et bonum." Although the Chancellor had, prior to this time, taken the most active, and perhaps the principal part in administering æquam et rectam justitiam; he does not appear previously to have been the only responsible person, nor to have had for such exercise of judgment and authority a positive appointment from the King; Mr. George Jeremy, in his elaborate treatise of the Equity Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, says, "Although the Chancery, and the name of the high officer who presided therein, are mentioned in many early statutes, it is not until the latter portion of the reign of Edward the Third that a statute is met with which can be considered to give any sanction or even to bear any reference to the peculiar or equity part of his jurisdiction. By the 36th Edward III. c. 9., which forms part of a capitulary of very comprehensive articles granted by the King with the assent of Parliament, it was enacted, 'that if any man feel aggrieved contrary to any of the articles above written, or others contained in divers statutes, and will come into the Chancery, or any for him, and thereof make complaint, he shall presently there have remedy by force of the said articles and statutes, without elsewhere pursuing to have remedy.' Although this provision cannot be considered to have laid the foundation of the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Chancellor, it might, according to the liberal interpretations of those times, have been regarded as having conferred upon him a more extensive and a better sanctioned authority than he had previously any right to exercise; but whether his jurisdiction were assumed or delegated, it is obvious that when once established, the more diligently he and his officers exerted their ingenuity in the framing of new writs to the courts of law, the more confined would be the opportunity or necessity of his extending it; and it is a matter of fact, that after the reign of this monarch the number of the writs to the courts of law was little, if at all, increased." [1]

That the Chancellor, however, did, from this time forward, proceed to exercise a jurisdiction in matters of equity, is evident from a petition addressed to him in the 38th Edward III. [2], and that the powerful and complicated machinery of equitable jurisdiction, as afterwards displayed, had been set in motion by this proclamation is clearly to be collected from the petition of the Commons in the 7th of Richard II.[3], which prayeth, "que desormes nule comision soit directe hors de la Chancellerie, ne lettere de prive seal, pur destourber la possession d'aucum liege le Roy, sanz due proces & respons du partie, & especialment quant la partie est prest de faire ce que la Loy demande, &c." the answer to which petition was, "Ceux qi se sentent grevez monstrent lour grevance en especial a Chanceller, qi lour purvoiera de remede, &c." In the 13th year of the same King, the Commons pray, that "neither the Chancellor, nor any other person, may make any ordinance against the common law, or ancient custom of the realm, and the statutes already made, or to be made in this present parliament, but that the Common Law may run impartially for all the people; and that no judgment given shall be annulled without due process of law." The reply was as evasive as the generality of royal answers to petitions were at that period: "Soit use come ad este use devant ces hures, issint que la Regalie du Roi soit sauve. Et si ascun soi sente greve, monstre en especial, et droit luy serra fait." [4] And by another petition in the same year, "the Commons prayed that none of the King's lieges be made to come by writ Quibusdam certis de causis, nor by any other such writ, to appear before the Chancellor or the King's Council to answer any matter for which remedy might be obtained at Common Law, &c., on penalty to the Chancellor of one hundred pounds, to be levied to the use of the King, and the clerk who wrote the writ to lose his office in the Chancery, and never to be placed in any other office in the Chancery." To which petition the King made answer, "Le Roy voet sauver sa Regalie, come ses progenitours ont faitz devant luy." [5] The answers were doubtless equivalent to a negative, as no statute was made thereupon; and it is evident that the Commons did not gain any thing by their petitions, as appears by the act 17th Richard II. cap. 6., which, reciting that people were compelled to come before the King's Council, or into Chancery, by writs grounded on untrue suggestions, enacts, that the Chancellor for the time being, presently after such suggestions be duly found and proved to be untrue, shall have power to award and ordain damages, according to his discretion, to him who is so unduly troubled as aforesaid. This statute merely gives the Chancellor power to award damages to such as were compelled to come before him in Chancery by writs grounded on untrue suggestions. The untrue suggestions here mentioned, which seem to have been the causes of so much animadversion, were false allegations made by persons applying to the Chancery for writs of subpœna, upon which the Chancellor granted writs returnable before himself, instead of making the same returnable in the Courts of Common Law; "paront les loialx liges du Roialme sont torcenousement travaillez et vexez, &c. sanz recoverir ent avoir de lour damages et coustages." It has been suggested[1] that bills and petitions addressed to the Chancellor[2] were first filed in the seventeenth of Richard II., in consequence of this statute.

The equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery made rapid advancement during the reigns of Richard the Second and the three succeeding Sovereigns, though many attempts were made to subvert it, all of which, however, proved ineffective. That portion of equitable interference which appeared the most obnoxious to the people, was the writ of subpœna, now the leading and principal process of an Equity Court. The general distaste exhibited by the Commons in their petitions during several years after the first use of this writ is remarkable, and their feelings on the subject may be estimated by the uncourteous way they speak of the framer of the writ. "Item prionт les Communes que come plusours gentz de vostre roialme soy sentent graundment grevez de ceo que vos briefs appelles briefs sub pena, et certis de causis, faitz et suez hors de vostre Chauncelerie et Escheqer, des matiers determinables par vostre commune ley, que unques ne furent grauntez ne usez devaunt le temps le darrein Roy Richard, que Johan Waltham[3] nadgairs Evesque de Salesbirs, de sa subtiltee fist trover et commencier tiel novelrie encountre la fourme de la commune ley de vostre roialme, si bien a tres graunde perde et arrerisment des profitz que duissent sourder a vous soveraigne seigneur en voz courtes, &c. Et en outre, que si bien la peyne contenue en tieux briefs patentz, come tout la proces d'ycelles, soient voidez et tenuz pur null; et si ascuns tieux briefs appellez sub pena, et certis de causis, et Quia datum est nobis intelligi, soient suez hors de vos ditz courtz, encontre cest ordinance en temps a venir, que mesmes les briefs et tout la proces dependants sur ycelles, soient tout outrement voidez et tenuz pur null." The answer of the King was "Le Roy soy avisera,[4]" which shows that the writ of subpœna was esteemed, by those who knew its value, too efficacious a mode of effecting justice, to be subverted without sufficient cause. The Commons, however, presented another petition on the subject, in the ninth of Henry the Fifth, which was not more successful in its results than the former one: "Soit il advisee par le Roi. Et dureront tres toutz les ordinances suisditz tanque a le Parlement proscheinement a tenir,[5]" was the equivocal and unsatisfactory answer. King Henry the Fifth did not, however, live to convoke another Parliament, nor did the Commons rest satisfied, but they again petitioned the Parliament, holden in the name of the young King, to put a restriction on the equitable jurisdiction of the Chancery. The answer given to this petition was "soit l'estatut ent fait l'an xvij. del regne du Roi Richard Secounde gardez et mys en due execution." Notwithstanding this positive answer of the Parliament, the Commons renewed their remonstrances in the fifteenth of Henry the Sixth: "Also prayen the Communes þat for asmuche as divers persones have been gretly vexed and greved by writtes sub pena purchased for maters determinables be the commune lawe of this lande, to þe grete harmes of the persones so vexed, and in subversion and lettying of the saide commune lawe," &c. To this petition the following answer was given, "þe King will that the statuits made þerof be duely kept after the forme and effect of þe same; and þt no writ of sub pena be grauntid hereafter till seurtee be founde to satisfie þe partie so vexed and greved for his damages and expenses, if it so be þat the matier may not be made goode which is contenyd in the byll."[6] It may be inferred

[2] Many valuable and curious specimens of ancient bills and petitions addressed to the Chancellor during the reigns of Richard II., Henry V., Henry VI., Edward IV., and Richard III., are prefixed to the first and second volumes of the Calendars of Chancery proceedings in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, published by direction of the Record Commission.

[3] Though John de Waltham has been handed down to posterity by the parliament of the 3d Hen. V. as the first framer of the much-condemned writ of subpœna, yet there is reason to believe that it did not originate with him, but that he merely modified and augmented a writ somewhat similar in its effects, and which was very prevalent in the reign of Edward III. Numerous entries on the Close Rolls of the reign of that King are to be found, which show that parties became surety, "sub pœna centum librarum de terris et catallis suis ad opus regis levandis," that defendants should be in the Court of Chancery at a fixed day; and on the Close Roll of 37 Edw. III. it appears that, upon petition exhibited, the defendants were commanded "quòd essent in Cancellariâ Regis ad certum diem ubicumque tunc foret ad ostendendum si quid pro se haberent vel dicere scirent quare, &c. et ad faciendum ulterius quòd curia consideraret, &c. et quia prædicti defendentes qui de essendo in Cancellaria prædicta ad diem prædictum sufficienter præmuniti fuerunt in eadem Cancellaria ad diem illum solemniter vocati non venerunt," the sheriff was commanded to levy distress on the land in dispute.

Equitable Jurisdiction.

that this statute satisfied the Commons, or else they found it useless to make further remonstrances against the increasing power of equitable jurisdiction; and in the seventh of Edward IV., when Robert Kirkham, Master of the Rolls, had the Great Seal delivered to him by the King, the following memorandum was entered on the Close Roll[1] of that year: "And, over this, the King willed and commanded there and thanne that all manere of maters, to be examyned and discussed in the Court of Chauncery, should be directed and determined accordyng to EQUITE and CONSCIENCE, and to the old cours and laudable custume of the same Court, so that if in any such maters any difficultie or question of lawe happen to ryse, that he herein take th' advis and counsel of sume of the Kynges justices, so that right and justice may be duely ministred to every man."

From this time the jurisdiction of the Court of Equity went on smoothly, and the Chancellor daily acquired additional power and importance, transacting every thing vice nomine et loco Regis[2], and deciding causes by the rules of his own conscience; in fact, he had become sole judge in matters of equity, and almost possessed potestatem absolutam; but Mr. Jeremy is of opinion that the Chancellor's power in all its important functions was not finally determined until the reign of James I.

LAWS.

LAWS.

HAVING attempted a brief description of the early Courts of Law and Equity, it may be necessary to show in what manner a reference to the instruments in this Volume may be made available in explaining and illustrating old laws and law maxims, and for this purpose a few subjects have been selected to draw attention to the species of legal matter found in the Close Rolls.

LEPROSY.—On the subject of this loathsome disease, little has been stated either in our histories, chronicles, or laws. Glanville makes no mention of leprosy; and Theloall, in le Digest des Briefs originals, lib. 1. cap. 9, says "Je ne ay leu ē ascun de nostres livres q̃ leprosy serroit ascun impediment pur home de user action, sinon en Bracton, mes il sembleroit bone reason, q̃ il ne suyroit en propre person, eins touz foitz p attorney, si come la ley est que il serra separee a communione popul'. Les parols de Bracton sont tiels; lib. 5. tract. 5. cap. 20. 421: Datur etiam exceptio tenenti ex persona petentis peremptoria propter morbum petentis incurabilem, et corporis deformitatem: ut si petens leprosus fuerit, et tam deformis quòd aspectus eum sustinere non possit, et ita quòd a communione gentium sit separatus, talis quidem placitare non potest, nec hæreditatem petere," &c.

Amongst the Normans, leprosy was an impediment to succession[3], when any person was solemnly adjudged to be afflicted with that distemper by sentence of the church[4]; but Bracton says, that with us in England, though it be an exception to a plaintiff, on account of the danger of the disease being spread incurred by his appearance in the courts of law, yet it is not an impediment to descent; and my Lord Coke says, (2 Inst.,) that "a leper may be heir to another." Notwithstanding these high authorities, it may, however, be inferred from an entry at page 1 of this Volume, that according to the ancient law of England, leprosy in England, as in France, was an impediment to descent. It appears that a grant made by a person after he fell sick of the leprosy was void: "The King, &c. to the sheriff of Somerset, greeting. We command you to give to Geoffry de St. Martin seizin of the lands which belonged to William of Newmarch, in your bailiwick. For we have committed to him the custody thereof, so that he answer for them to us at our exchequer; and if he (William of Newmarch) have given away any of his lands after he fell sick of the leprosy, cause the same to be restored to his barony. Witness, &c." In the Abbreviatio Placitorum, page 9, leprosy was pleaded and allowed, in the reign of King John, and the land thereupon adjudged from a leprous brother to the sister.

BREVE DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO.—The earliest entry on this subject upon record occurs in a document presented in this Volume at page 435. The intent of this writ was to prevent a supposititious heir from being set up to the prejudice of the heir presumptive, and was granted to such heir presumptive against the widow of the deceased, through whom the property descended, upon suspicion of her feigning herself with child, according to the rule of law set forth in the Registrum Brevium, made for the benefit and safety of right heirs, contra partus suppositos.[1]

That the practice of the species of deception here alluded to was frequently attempted in those times is evident from the numerous regulations devised for the purpose of preventing the success of such attempts; and the seventh clause in Magna Charta, namely, "that the widow should remain 'in capitali mesuagio mariti sui per quadraginta dies post obitum mariti sui,'" though doubtless intended for the benefit of the widow, yet, nevertheless, says Barrington, in his observations on the statute, it was to prevent a supposititious child; and in the laws of Hoel Dda (p. 164) it appears that the anxiety to prevent this imposition was greater still: "Fœmina, quæ se pregnantem affirmaverit tempore mortis mariti sui, in domo ejus manebit, donec constiterit utrum pregnans fuerit vel non; et tunc, si non fuerit pregnans, mulctam solvat trium vaccarum, et domum et fundum hæredi relinquat." If the widow, upon due examination, were, however found to be enceinte, she was to be kept under restraint until delivered; but if not found to be pregnant, then the presumptive heir was to be forthwith admitted to the inheritance. Upon comparison, the entry at page 435 of this Volume will be found to agree in most particulars with the writ in the Registrum Brevium. See also the entry in the Abbreviatio Placitorum, 26th Henry III. p. 119.

ADULTERY.—Being only an offence of spiritual cognizance, it was never criminal in this country, either by common or statute law, except during the time of the Protectorate, when to commit adultery and fornication was made felony, in both man and woman, without benefit of clergy.[2]

By the laws of Solon, if a man detected another in the act of adultery with his wife, he was allowed to kill him upon the spot; so likewise by the Roman law, when the adulterer was found in the husband's own house: it was also the same among the Goths. With us, however, such slaying is not ranked in the class of justifiable homicide, as in cases of forcible rape, but in that of manslaughter.[3]

A curious case of adultery may be noticed at page 126, whence it appears that the husband inflicted summary punishment, for which offence he was not held as cognizable at law, because he had prohibited the adulterer from coming to his house.

ORIGINAL WRITS.—It has been already stated that one of the principal duties of the Chancellor was to frame original writs and mandates, according as the circumstances which the cases submitted to him by the King demanded, to relieve suitors who found the existing law, as administered, oppressive; or wherein the law did not provide a proper or sufficient remedy.[4] In process of time, however, the framing of writs became a matter of so much certainty that hardly any case could arise for which an established precedent could not be found to give the specific redress required. From several instances in this Volume it appears that new forms of writs were frequently ordered to be used for the future, without any reason assigned, as at page 32, "Hoc breve de cætero erit de cursu." Again, new forms were adopted, without any remark, as at page 114, for in that entry letters are substituted for the names of the parties. New forms again occur, without any other notice than the word forma, as at p. 210. These and similar entries cannot, however, but be deemed important, because they show that the Officina brevium was at that time in existence.[5] The entry at page 32 is an early specimen of those writs

[1] The words are these: "Nota quòd si quis habens hæreditatem duxerit aliquam in uxorem, et postea moriatur ille sine hærede de corpore suo exeunte, per quod hæreditas illa fratri ipsius defuncti descendere debeat, et uxor illa dicit se esse pregnantem de ipso defuncto cùm non sit, habeat frater et hæres ejus breve de ventre inspiciendo." "It seemeth," says Lord Coke, page 8 b, by Bracton (lib. ii. fo. 69.) and Fleta (lib. i. c. 14.) "that this writ doth lie 'ubi uxor alicujus in vitâ viri sui se pregnantem finxit cùm non sit, vel post mortem viri sui se pregnantem fecit, cùm non sit de viro suo mortuo, ad exhæredationem veri hæredis &c. ad querelam veri hæredis per præceptum domini Regis, &c.' which is to be understood according to the rule of the Registr.; when a man, having lands in fee simple, dieth, and his wife soon after marrieth again, and feigns herself with child by her former husband, in this case, though she be married, the writ 'de ventre inspiciendo' doth lie."

[2] This borders on the severity of a law in Sicily, that "si quis cum volente et acquiescente vidua stuprum commiserit, flammis ultricibus exuretur." Vide Const. Sic. p. 251. "Hic est, qui leges regni cancellat iniquas, Et mandata pii principis æqua facit."

[5] It is evidently implied, by the statute of Westminster 2, 13 Edward I. c. 24, that the Officina brevium had been some time established, for in that statute it is provided that "et quotienscumque decætero evenerit in Cancellaria quod in uno casu reperitur breve et in consimili casu cadente sub eodem jure et simili indigente remedio concordent clerici de Cancellaria in brevi faciendo intituled "de cursu," which were issued out of Chancery upon the applicant finding pledges, and swearing that he had a true cause of action. It was in consequence of this assumption of authority on the part of the Chancellor, which was considered as exceeding the duties of his office, that it was provided by the Council at Oxford, in the year 1258, that the Chancellor was not to have the power of issuing any other writs than such as were by the direct command of the King or of his Council.[1] LAWS.

FALSIFYING.—The crime of falsifying[2] may be divided into several species, as relating to false charters, false measures, false money, and others.[3] From instruments in pages 15 and 32 it appears that William Scrubz being convicted, "per feloniam quam fecit de falsificatione sigilli Regis," all his lands were escheated to the Crown; at page 367, that William Kocaine had given security "quod stabit recto in curia Regis de falsis cartis et falsis sigillis et aliis de quibus rettatus fuit et imprisonatus."

"It should be observed," says Glanville, "that if a person be convicted of falsifying a charter it becomes necessary to distinguish whether it be a royal[4] or a private one; because, when convicted of the offence, the party shall, in the former case, be condemned as in the crime of 'leese Majesty;' but in the latter the convict is to be dealt with in a milder manner." The case of Scrubz may be placed under the first of these heads; that of Kocaine under the second.

WILL and TESTAMENT.—Blackstone says, that in England the power of bequeathing is coeval with the first rudiments of law[5], for we have no traces or memorials of any time when it did not exist. There seems to be no doubt of lands having been devisable by will before the Conquest[6]; but upon the introduction of military tenures a restraint upon devising lands (except those holden in socage) took place, as it was one of the qualities of feuds, that the feudatory could not alien or dispose of his feud; neither could he devise it by will.[7]

Since the Conquest the common law had given to every one a right to dispose of personal property, but no estate greater than for a term of years could be disposed of by will. The restraints upon alienation by will continued for some centuries after the restraint on alienation by deed had been removed; and it was not till the reign of Henry VIII. that lands were permitted to be disposed of by will[8]; and not till the Restoration, that the power of devising real property became valid, which was occasioned by the conversion of all lands (except some copyholds) into socage tenure.

From a mandate in page 169 it appears that a man could not devise land which he had of the King's gift: by which it evidently is intended to mean lands holden in capite, which before the statute of Quia Emptores could not be devised without the consent of the chief lord of the fee. The words are these: "Rex domino P. Winton' Episcopo Justiciario Angliæ, &c. Mandamus vobis quod teneri faciatis testamentum Adæ de Gurdun quod fecit de rebus suis mobilibus et omnibus aliis in Anglia secundum dispositionem testamenti excepta terra quam de dono nostro habuit." (Vide p. 169.)

Many other documents will be found elucidatory of testamentary laws and customs.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.—Instruments illustrative of matters and causes liable to ecclesiastical cognizance are of frequent occurrence in this Volume: the following is not unworthy of attention, as being a curious instance of the Ecclesiastical Court having exceeded its power, in the 8th of Hen. III., by appealing to the Court of Rome in a case of bastardy, and for which it appears to have received a severe rebuke from the King.

vel atterminent quærentes in proximo parliamento et scribant casus in quibus concordare non possunt et referant eos ad proximum parliamentum et de consensu jurisperitorum fiat breve ne contingat decætero quod curia diu deficiat quærentibus in justitia perquirenda." Upon consulting the Registrum de Cancellariâ, better known as the Registrum Brevium, it will be found that remedies were to be had for almost every species of wrong that could be committed, by suing for a writ specially adapted to the case. Hence Blackstone argues, that with a little accuracy on the part of the clerks of Chancery, and a little liberality on that of the judges, by extending rather than narrowing the remedial effects of the writ, the provision of the statute of Westminster might have effectually answered all the purposes of an equity court, except that of obtaining a discovery by the oath of the defendant. This was also the opinion of Fairfax, a very learned judge in the time of Edward IV. LAWS.

"The King to the Archbishop of Dublin, Justiciary of Ireland, greeting. In reply to the charge we lately gave you, to write to us again in what manner you had proceeded in the cause of Nicholas de Felda, who sued the abbot and canons of St. Thomas at Dublin, before our judges in our court, for two carucates of land, with their appurtenances, in Kelredheri, by an assize of mort d'ancestor, but against whom, before the said judges, the bar of bastardy having been objected, it was by the same judges referred to you in the Ecclesiastical Court to pronounce upon his bastardy or legitimacy, — you declare to us by your letters, that as he sued for the said land in the Civil Court, by our letters of mort d'ancestor, against the afore-mentioned abbot and canons, and the bar of bastardy having been objected to him, you have therefore proceeded no further in that court. And, moreover, that the afore-mentioned Nicholas, by mandate from our judges, being willing to prove his legitimacy before you in the Ecclesiastical Court, produced his witnesses, and their attestations being declared, after long-continued controversies and altercations as well on the part of the abbot as of the same Nicholas, when you were proceeding to give final judgment, two girls appeared, who were in their minority, and were the daughters of Richard de la Feld, father of the aforesaid Nicholas, and appealed to you not to proceed in giving judgment, since this would manifestly be converted to their prejudice, in as much as they would be precluded from seeking elsewhere the inheritance claimed, neither could they be relieved by putting it in its former state. Whereupon, deferring to that appeal, by the advice of prudent men, as you say, you transmitted the cause to the Pope, drawn out as it had been discussed before you; at which we are greatly astonished, and not without just cause provoked, that, notwithstanding the said Nicholas's legitimacy was made fully evident to you by the production of the witnesses and their declared attestations, you should nevertheless, because of the appeal of the girls aforesaid, who were in no wise concerned nor even mentioned in the assize referred to, nor was either of them a party to the suit, have therefore put off pronouncing final judgment, and improperly, as it were declining our trial, have wished to refer to a foreign dignity what was within our jurisdiction, and appertained to our dignity alone to determine, thereby setting a most pernicious precedent. And further, even if the aforesaid Nicholas had obtained possession of the land aforesaid by the said assize, the benefit of petition for the inheritance was clearly open to the aforesaid girls, in our court, by writ of right, especially as by our letters of mort d'ancestor the question was of the possession, and not of the property; and in the case offered for your consideration, nothing more belonged to your authority than to admit the proofs of the said Nicholas's legitimacy, and then to send him back to our judges, with your letters testimonial. By the advice, therefore, of our 'Magnates' and 'Fideles' assisting us, we command and firmly enjoin you, notwithstanding the appeal premised, not on that account to delay your judgment, remitting him (the said Nicholas), with your letters testimonial, to our judges, in order that they may, in the imparlance to be argued before them, be enabled to exhibit to him plenitude of justice, according to the laws and customs of our land of Ireland. Witness H. &c. (Hubert de Burgh, Chief Justice of England) at Gloucester, on the 10th day of November." p. 629.

COMMENCEMENTS OF THE KINGS' REIGNS.—It does not appear to have been the ancient practice of the English Constitution at the decease of a King to consider his successor as King until he had been inaugurated: the modern law maxim is that the King never dies, which supposes that in England there can be no interregnum[1], the next heir succeeding as King immediately upon the throne becoming vacant. King John did not assume the regal dignity and prerogatives until he had been crowned, although his brother Richard had been dead upwards of seven weeks[2] before the coronation took place; and the reign of Henry III., like that of his father, was reckoned from the day of his enthronement.[3] The accession of Edward I. was held to be upon the day of his recognition, and [1] This is not in accordance with what is laid down as law in Dyer and Anderson, which is "that the King, who is heir or successor to the deceased King, may write himself as King and begin his reign the same day that his progenitor or predecessor dies." Since the accession of Edward I. there has been no interregnum. "The Crown has always been claimed, though not constantly enjoyed, by right of blood;" and from the precedents adduced and opinions taken at the accession of James I. it was declared to be the law of England, "that there can be no interregnum within the same." (Howell's State Trials, vol. ii. p. 626.) "It is now therefore an established maxim of constitutional law, that immediately on the death of the King the right of the Crown is vested in his heir, who commences his reign from that moment." Allen on Prerogative, p. 49. Black. Com. vol. i. p. 96. Tyrrell's Bibliotheca Politica, p. 169.

[2] Richard I. died on the 6th of April 1199. King John was crowned on the 27th of the following May, which was Ascension Day, and his regnal year was computed from one Ascension Day to the next; consequently some of the years of his reign exhibit an increase of seven weeks more than others, owing to the day of his coronation being that of a moveable feast, which of course sometimes fell earlier or later, as Easter happened.

[3] Henry III. was not elected king till the feast of Saint Simon and Saint Jude; and his coronation took place on the following day, though John had been then dead since the eighteenth. "Il est remarquable qu'on ne commença à not upon the day of his father's demise, which happened four days previously.[1] The fact that all the Rolls of Chancery, namely, the Patent, Charter, Close, and Fine Rolls, commence the regnal year of each King agreeably to this mode of computation supports this hypothesis; and, moreover, it does not appear that any of the early English Monarchs exercised any act of sovereign power, or disposed of public affairs, till after their election or coronation. These few examples appear to be undeniable proofs, that the fundamental laws and constitutions of this kingdom, based on the Anglo-Saxon custom, were, at that time, against an hereditary succession, unless by common consent of the whole realm: however, "the Crown of England (says Allen[2]) has been for ages hereditary, and it has been long a settled principle of English law, that on the death of the King his royal dignity descends immediately to his successor. That principle is not now to be controverted. It has been sanctioned by the practice of many centuries, and is become a fundamental maxim of constitutional law."

The Close Rolls have been stated to abound in information concerning the condition of society; it belongs, however, to the historian to select and apply such instruments as may correct the errors and prejudices of previous writers. With the view of testing the integrity and comparative merits of the elder historians and chroniclers, a few entries, and those of minor importance, have been selected from the Close Rolls; because, if it be shown that those writers have detailed with exactness and accuracy trifling and unimportant events, they become more entitled to confidence in their narrations of matters of greater moment.

It is related by Matthew Paris, that "Eodem anno (1222) sexto idus Februarii, audita sunt tonitrua terribilia; ex quorum collisione fulmen exiliens," &c. Again, "in eodem anno in die exaltationis Sanctæ Crucis, per totam Angliam mugierunt horrenda tonitrua; et sequuta est inundatio pluviarum, cum turbine, et impetu ventorum: quæ tempestas, cum aëris intemperie, usque ad purificationem Beatæ Mariæ perseverans multis et maximè colonis, molesta fuit." And again, "Eodem etiam anno (1222) in festo Sancti Andreæ Apostoli audita sunt tonitrua per totam Angliam generalia; quæ ecclesias et ecclesiarum turres, domos et ædificia, castrorum muros, et propugnacula subverterunt." All of which is corroborated by the Close Roll of the seventh year of King Henry III. which contains numerous entries concerning the ravages and destruction occasioned by tempests and impetuous hurricanes, whereby houses and large forest trees were blown to the ground.

Matthew Paris says, at page 161, "Eodem tempore (1211) Reginaldus Comes Bononiæ vir strenuus et in arte militari probatissimus à Philippo Rege Francorum de comitatu suo injuste expulsus et bonis omnibus privatus est, &c. Comes vero Reginaldus in Angliam veniens, a Rege Johanne honorifice susceptus est." This statement is corroborated by three or four entries[3], which prove that Reginald Dammartin, Count of Bologne, was in England at that time, and did homage to King John at London on Ascension Day, and that he had a grant of several manors; a fact which is ample evidence of an honorable reception and of royal favor.

Most of the contemporary historians relate, that King John, in the year 1202, during the siege of Mirabel Castle in Poictou, made prisoners of his nephew Arthur Duke of Brittany and the Princess Elianor his sister, called the "Beauty of Brittany." Arthur is supposed to have been murdered by his uncle, and of Elianor it is stated that she was imprisoned in Bristol Castle for forty years; the incarceration of that young and guiltless Princess is one of the many actions of King John, for which his memory has been deservedly stigmatized. The entries on the Close Rolls relating to the Princess Elianor confirm the narrations of the monkish writers as to her imprisonment, though at the same time they show that she was not in want of the necessaries of life, as has been alleged by some modern historians, but on the contrary that she enjoyed many indulgences. Elianor is said to have possessed a high and invincible spirit, and to have constantly insisted on her right to the Crown[4], which, perhaps, was the reason of her being kept under restraint during the whole of her life-time. If the Crown of England was at that period considered as hereditary, she had a priority of right to her uncle, and consequently to King Henry; but if it was an established law in England, as appears by the Close Roll 13th Henry III., that "non est consuetudo vel lex in terra nostra Angliæ quod filia fratris alicujus primogeniti fratrem juniorem patri suo succedentem hæreditarie super hæreditate sua possit vel debeat impetere[1], then it would seem that King Henry need have had no apprehension of her being able legally to deprive him of the Crown. A few of the instruments relating to this illustrious Prisoner are here inserted; the others are, however, exceedingly interesting, and well worthy of attention, not only as concerning a Princess of whom little has been written, but as illustrative of the domestic economy of that period.

The Mayor of Winchester is commanded to send in haste to the King, for the use of his niece Elianor and the two daughters of the King of Scotland[2], robes of dark green, namely, tunics and supertunics, with capes of cambric, and fur of miniver, and twenty-three yards of good linen cloth; also, for the use of the King's niece, one good cap of dark brown, furred with miniver, and one hood for rainy weather, for the use of the same; besides robes of bright green for the use of her three waiting maids, namely, tunics and supertunics, and cloaks, with caps of miniver or rabbit skins, and furs of lamb's-skin; and thin shoes for the use of the daughters of the King of Scotland, the King's niece, and her three waiting maids; and also, for the use of the King's niece, one saddle with gilded reins; and the mayor is to come himself, with all the above articles, to Corf, there to receive the money for the cost of the same.—6th July, 15 John. Page 144.

The mayor and reeves of Winchester are ordered to send, without delay, to Corf constabulary, for the use of the King's niece, a beautiful saddle, with scarlet ornaments and gilded reins.—9th Aug., 15 John. Page 150.

The mayor and reeves of Winchester are commanded to send to the Queen, the King's niece, and the two daughters of the King of Scotland, who are at Corf, certain robes, caps, and other things necessary for their vestment, as Robert de Vipont will inform them by his letters patent.—29th Jan., 15 John. Page 157.

Peter de Maulay is commanded to procure for the King's niece, who is in the custody of Robert de Vipont, one scarlet robe, namely, a cloak, and a tunic with cendal, and another for the wife of Robert de Vipont; and also, for the King's niece, some good and fine linen cloth, enough to make four or five chemises and four sheets, not, however, of the King's finest cloth, but rather, if they have none suited for this except the King's finest cloth, to purchase it as good as they can with the King's money; and she is also to have two pair of boots delivered to her by the messenger of Robert de Vipont, the bearer of this order.—15th July, 16 John. Page 168.

The barons of the Exchequer are ordered to make allowance to Peter de Maulay of 7,000 marks, demanded of him as part of his fine made with King John for having married Isabella daughter and heiress of Robert de Turneham, which he had laid out on the works of Corf Castle, and in expenses consequent upon the custody of Elianor the King's cousin, the custody of the daughters of the King of Scotland, and the custody of Richard, the King's brother; and also in the expences incurred by King John at divers times at Corf, after Louis, the French King's son, had landed in England. Witness Hubert de Burgh, &c.—5 Hen. 3. Page 466.

The treasurer and chamberlains are ordered to pay to Andrew Bukerel £6 14*s.* 2*d.* which he laid out, by the King's command, in the following articles; namely, a silken couch, price £1 10*s.* 1*d.*, and delivered to John de Cundi for the use of Elianor the King's cousin, and Isabella daughter of the King of Scotland; two coverlets of fine linen, price £2 2*s.* 1*d.*, likewise for their use; and six yards and a half of scarlet, price £1 3*s.*, to make two coverlets, also for the use of the same; and in six yards and a half of dark green, price thirteen shillings, to make a robe for the use of their waiting maid; one fur of lamb's-skin, price four shillings, for the use of the same waiting maid; and forty yards of linen cloth, price twenty-one shillings, for the use of the same Elianor and Isabella.—8th Dec., 6 Hen. 3. Page 483.

The treasurer and chamberlains are ordered to pay out of the treasury to Master John de Beauchamp, the physician who administered medicine to the King's cousin Elianor when sick, three marks, to purchase a palfrey in the room of the palfrey which he had lost in returning from Corf to London.—13th June, 6 Hen. 3. Page 483.

[2] About the year 1209 King John marched toward Scotland with a powerful army, but when the Scottish King was informed of his approach, being aware of the cruelty of John's disposition, he grew alarmed, and made an advance to treat for peace; by the mediation of friends of both kingdoms this was at length effected upon these terms; namely, that the King of Scotland should pay to the King of England 1,100 marks of silver, and moreover that his two daughters should be delivered to him as hostages, for the better securing of the peace. The sheriff of Gloucester is ordered to cause necessaries to be provided for the King's cousin Elianor, and her two waiting maids, who are staying by the King's order in Gloucester Castle, and for Walter de St. Audoen, Richard de Landa, and Gilbert de Greinville, the keepers of the same Elianor, with their six horses and eight men, together with the domestic establishment of the same Elianor, as long as they stay there by the King's order; and the cost incurred for this is to be accounted to him at the Exchequer. Gloucester, 7th Aug., 6 Hen. 3. Page 507.

The sheriffs of London are ordered to let Ralph Musard have five ounces of silk for the use of Elianor, the King's cousin. 19th Aug., 6 Hen. 3. Page 509.

The barons of the Exchequer are to allow in the sheriff of Gloucester's account £117, which he laid out in the expences of the King's cousin Elianor, staying in Gloucester Castle by the King's order; namely, ten shillings a day from the eve of St. Peter ad Vincula, in the sixth year of the King's reign, until the feast of St. Benedict next before the Annunciation of the Blessed Mary, in the seventh year, both days inclusive. Gloucester, 21st March, 7 Hen. 3. Page 538.

Whilst Elianor was in Gloucester Castle, one of her keepers, Walter de St. Audoen, was taken dangerously ill, and thereupon the King dispatched his beloved and faithful Robert Lovel to assist the others, namely, Ralph Musard, Richard de Landa, and Matthew de Wallop, assigned for her custody, commanding them to admit him into the castle and tower, so that he himself might have free ingress and egress to and from the tower, but that his suite should remain without in the castle, and to act upon his advice in case of the death of the said Walter, or in any other emergency. And at the same time the King sent thither for the garrison and safeguard of the said castle, ten servants on horse and four crossbow-men on foot, ordering such and so many of the crossbow-men as the said Robert should name to lie every night within the two gates of the tower, and the said servants to remain day and night without in the castle. 15th May, 7 Hen. 3. Page 546.

The barons of the Exchequer are ordered to account to the sheriff of Gloucester certain sums of money expended by him in gloves, boots, silk, and other necessaries for the use of Elianor, the King's cousin; and also £12 which he laid out by the King's order, in the expences of the same Elianor, during a period of twenty-six days; viz. from Sunday the morrow of St. John the Baptist, in the seventh year of the King's reign, until Thursday the feast of St. Margaret, both days inclusive.—Cirencester, 23d July, 7 Hen. 3. Page 555.

The King to Peter de Orivall, greeting. We command you to let William our tailor have of our money, which is in your custody, £10 to discharge the expences of our cousin Elianor at Marlborough; let him also have two marks for the use of four foot servants staying in our castle at Marlborough, for the custody of the same Elianor.—20th Aug., 7 Hen. 3. Page 560.

The treasurer and chamberlains are to pay out of the treasury to Robert Lovel, the bearer of the order, £10 to defray the expences of the King's cousin Elianor.—13th Nov., 8 Hen. 3. Page 575.

The sheriffs of London are ordered to let Robert Lovel have one frail of figs, and another of almonds, for the use of the King's cousin Elianor.—13th Nov., 8 Hen. 3. Page 575.

Matthew Paris has noticed in his Chronicle one Master Alexander, who had been a celebrated expounder of divinity at Paris, and whose adulatory sermons had been greatly instrumental in moving the King to cruelty. By endeavouring to prove that it did not belong to the Pope to interfere with the secular power of Princes, and other such discourses, Master Alexander succeeded in insinuating himself into especial grace and favour with the King, and obtained many rich benefices: upon this being made known to the Pope, and after reconciliation had taken place between King John and his Holiness, Master Alexander was turned out of his livings. Whether Matthew Paris's narration of this be correct it is difficult to determine; but that the Pope had been exasperated against Master Alexander, and that an attempt to deprecate his wrath was made by King John, is evident by the following letter!

To the Most Holy Lord and Father Innocent, High Priest by God's grace, John, by the same grace, King, &c. Be it known unto your Holiness, that the lies which were put upon Master Alexander of Saint Albans, our clerk, were circulated only by the breath of envy; wherefore it may be aptly said, without the cloak of falsity, that, as much was inflicted upon Isaiah by the Jewish people, upon Moses for the Ethiopian woman [1], and Paul for the Seven Churches [2], so was no less inflicted upon Master Alexander by the slanderous rabble. And it is for this we devoutly supplicate you, Holy Father, if the same Master Alexander should chance to present himself at the feet of your Holiness, to vouchsafe, for God's sake and ours, to shew him all humanity, according to the manifoldness of your mercy.—From the New Temple, London, 23d of April, 16th John, A.D. 1215.

The following account given by Matthew Paris of an enormous fish washed upon the Norfolk coast, in the year 1255, is corroborated by an entry on the Close Rolls.

In the same year, from the feast of St. Valentine until the following month, the winds continued to rage most violently, accompanied by torrents of rain day and night, without cessation, raising such a tempest both by sea and land as had never been known before; and at the same time there was thrown up by the rage and turbulence of the waves an enormous sea-monster, which was washed on shore within the diocese of Norwich, and killed, as it was imagined, by the violence of the motion. It was in size much larger than a whale, and yet it was not supposed to be a whale; however, the fat from the belly of this monster enriched the whole neighbourhood round. Matth. Paris, p. 606.

The sheriff of Norfolk is commanded to cause to be sold at the best price he can get, by the view and testimony of honest and lawful men, the great and monstrous fish which was lately caught upon the land of a certain boy, who is a ward of the bishop of Norwich, as it is reputed, and which the same bishop claims as his wreck by reason of the wardship of the same, and safely to keep the money received therefrom, that he may have it at Westminster before the King and his council in three weeks of Easter, in order that what of right ought to be done herein be then done. Witness the King at Westminster, 19th Feb.—Rot. Claus. 39 Hen. III. m. 16.

It has been remarked by all writers that the venality and misuse of the great offices of state are to be reckoned among the faults of policy in the early periods of our history. The following instruments relating to the first judicial appointments in the realm evince the truth of such observations, and they at the same time show the determination of the King to afford redress to the aggrieved in flagrant cases of injustice. The firm and complacent letter to the Chancellor, who was also lord palatine of Durham, proves that Henry was not destitute of good counsellors, who were willing to use mild means before they proceeded to coercive measures. In the letter to the Justiciary of Ireland the King expresses his astonishment and incredulity at the grievous complaints urged against the Justiciary, and his determination to take matters seriously in hand, unless the Justiciary desist from his illegal attempts. In that addressed to Hubert de Burgh, the Chief Justiciary of England, the King appeals to his justice and honour, but does not accuse him of any malversation.

The King to the bishop of Durham, his Chancellor[1], greeting. We some time since wrote to you respecting the prior of Durham, commanding you to restore to him the cart-horses upon his lands, and his servants also, whom you have caused to be taken; and although in the aforesaid mandate it was inserted, that unless you obeyed it, we could by no means fail to render justice to him, yet has the same prior again returned to us, grievously complaining that you refuse to do any thing for him in that respect. Howbeit, for the especial and loving favour in which you stand with us, we have been again induced to exhort your discretion, as effectually as we are able, commanding you to deliver his men and cattle aforesaid within a month from St. Michael's day, and in the interval to suspend all dispute and quarrels which have arisen and grown up between you on this subject; for, as he has offered us security in our court to prosecute his imparlance against you upon the wrongful capture and detention of his men and cattle aforesaid, we have appointed him that day in our court, as in justice we are compelled to do; nor can we further pass it over, if at this our repeated command you refuse to deliver his men and cattle aforesaid, but we must extend our hands on this occasion to your lands and effects out of Haliwaresok, much as it will grieve and trouble us. Witness Hubert de Burgh, our Justiciary, at Cirencester, on the 22d of July, 7 Hen. 3. Page 569.

The King to the archbishop of Dublin, Justiciary of Ireland, greeting. We have been informed by the representation of our good men of Dublin of certain things respecting you, at which we are much astonished, and indeed they seem so strange and surpassing all belief, that as yet we are unwilling to give credit to them; namely, that you are endeavouring to acquire for your people exemption from talliages and aids, notwithstanding that they are partakers of the liberties which our citizens of Dublin enjoy, and share in common with them the advantages of a reciprocal commerce: also, that your clergy shall have their pleas relating to the lay fees, which they have purchased within the bounds of the city aforesaid, tried in the ecclesiastical court: also, that if any servant of the clergy, even though he be a layman, have any complaint against one of our citizens, such citizen is thereupon drawn into plea in that court to answer and obey the law; and on the contrary, if one of your people, being a layman, has in aught transgressed against any of our citizens, that such citizen shall come into your court, there to seek and accept of justice: also, if any baker dwelling in your land be attached for making bread of false weight, or any other person for a similar trespass, and be even convicted thereof before our bailiffs, you thereupon seek to have redress in your court, and demand the same trespasser, free and discharged from the hands of our bailiffs, and to be dealt with according to your pleasure: also, that you have caused a certain pillory to be erected on our highway, drawing within your fee and jurisdiction that which is known to appertain to us, contrary to our royal dignity, to which such jurisdiction, as well in our cities and towns of England as of Ireland, is acknowledged to belong: also, that religious houses shall plead in the court christian concerning lands given, sold, or delegated to them: also, that you pass over, without correction, the encroachments which religious houses make upon the city aforesaid: Now all these things are indeed manifestly repugnant to our right and dignity, and are contrary to the custom anciently enjoyed in all cities, towns, and places throughout our realm; and they are so much the more grievous and offensive to us, and cast the greater blemish on your fame, in proportion to the extent of power we have reposed in you as our representative in our kingdom of Ireland, to maintain our rights and deal out justice to others; so much so, that had any other person attempted the like, it would have fallen to you yourself, by the power confided to you, to have imposed a severe punishment upon him: We therefore firmly and strictly command you to let your loyalty to us, and your regard for your own honour, restrain you in future from the like, neither making such attempts yourself, nor suffering them to be made by others against us; or else be assured that we shall take the affair seriously in hand, being in no wise inclined to allow such things to gain strength against us. Witness Hubert de Burgh, &c. at the Tower of London, 8th of August, 7 Hen. 3. Page 570.

Henry, by the grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Aquitain, Earl of Anjou, to Hubert de Burgh, Justiciary of England, greeting. We remember having given an order[1] that such seizin should be given you of the marsh between Wiggenholt and Wells and Hakebech and Tilney and Terrington, as you had when last you sailed for Poictou in the service of King John our father; but because we are given to understand for certain that Eustace, formerly bishop of Ely, was seized of the aforesaid marsh on the day of his death[2], and that the church of Ely has always since been seized thereof; and as it therefore seems to our Council that the form of our aforesaid order was unreasonable, we command you, as our justiciary, to restore without delay to the church of Ely seizin of the marsh in question, notwithstanding our said order by which you entered upon the seizin thereof; and since to you especially it belongs to maintain and cherish justice, do you so demean yourself in this behalf that you may not set an example, or be yourself the occasion, of injuring others. Witness the Earl of Pembroke, at Worcester, 14th March, 2 Hen. 3, A.D. 1218. Page 378.

There has prevailed among historians a difference of opinion as to the probability of Prince Louis having received from our government a sum of money for restoring the hostages he had taken from the barons, upon the treaty of peace being concluded in the September of the year 1218. The French historians relate that a large sum of money was secured to him on that occasion, "which," says Tyrrell, "is certainly false, for Louis was so far from standing upon terms, that he was glad to "agree upon any conditions; and as for hostages, there could be nothing due from the King on that "account, but from the barons, his enemies, whose relations they were; but our writers do not mention "any money paid for them, and therefore it is most likely they were delivered gratis, though they are "not particularly mentioned." The following instrument seems corroborative of the statement of the French writers, which, if Tyrrell had been aware of, he would perhaps have formed a different opinion.

The King to Geoffry de Mariscis, Justiciary of Ireland, greeting. Whereas we before commanded you to come to us into England to do homage to us, and certify us respecting the state of our land of Ireland, we are greatly astonished that you have not yet come; and therefore we command you a second time, all delay and excuses set aside, to come to us into England before the approaching Easter, in the second year of our reign, to do your homage to us, and to treat with us, through our "fideles" of our Council, respecting the state of our land aforesaid. And since we owe a heavy debt to Louis, the French King's son, by agreement made between us, that he would depart out of our realm, which at length the Lord hath marvellously and mercifully procured; and are moreover indebted to his Holiness the Pope in an annual tribute of 300 marks, due to him from our kingdom of Ireland, which yet remains to be paid for the last two years; it would greatly relieve us, and much advance the tranquillity of our realm, if our faithful people and bailiffs would afford all the assistance they were able to provide us with money; and therefore we command and entreat you to come, as aforesaid, and bring with you as much money as you can, so demeaning yourself in this respect that we may have cause to commend your honesty and zeal; for if you should be induced to act otherwise, considerable loss and grievance might accrue to us and our realm on this account. Witness the Earl of Pembroke, at Exeter, 12th Feb., 2 Hen. 3. Page 376. see also page 465.

Immediately after Louis's departure the Legate dispatched inquisitors over every part of England to suspend all ecclesiastics whom they found to have been in the slightest degree favourable to the cause of Louis, of whatever rank or dignity they might be; and after depriving them of all their benefices, he distributed the same among his own clerks. The bishop of Lincoln, upon his return to England, paid 1000 marks to the Pope, and 100 more to the Legate, for the recovery of his bishoprick; and many other bishops, and the rest of the clergy, following his example, were compelled to purchase the Legate's favour by the payment of large sums of money. It seems, however, from the following proclamation, which is not noticed in any of the contemporary chronicles, that several of the clergy, being perhaps unwilling to submit to this species of imposition, chose rather to remain in excommunication than to purchase absolution on such degrading terms.

The King to the sheriffs of Kent [and of Essex], greeting. We order you, without delay, to cause proclamation to be made throughout your bailiwick, that all the clergy who were excommunicated because they were adherents to Louis or his favourers, and have not yet received absolution, shall depart our realm before Midlent next, in the second year of our reign; and that all who are found in England after the aforesaid term shall be taken; and whomsoever of the clergy that you shall find in your bailiwick after that term abiding in excommunication on the account aforesaid, do you take and safely keep until we give you further order thereupon.—18th Feb., 2 Hen. 3. Page 377.

The order of knighthood was a dignity which formerly added a lustre to the highest degree of nobility, and was esteemed even by Princes and Kings themselves. The ceremony of creating a knight was generally performed in the royal palace, and robes of different colours were given to the intended objects of that royal mark of distinction. The following entry gives an account of the robes presented to a knight on his receiving the order:

The King to the sheriff of Southampton, greeting. We order you to allow Thomas Esturmy, our valet, a scarlet robe [1], with a cloak of fine linen, and another robe of green or brown, and a saddle, and a pair of reins, and a cloak for wet weather, and a couch [2], and a pair of linen sheets, as he is to be made a knight.

The robes and other knightly insignia presented by King Henry III. to Alexander the young King of Scotland, when he knighted him at York [3], in the year 1251, is thus described on the Close Roll of that year; [4]

Edward of Westminster is commanded to procure immediately a handsome sword, and scabbard of silk, the hilt to be of silver and well ornamented, and also a handsome belt, on which to hang the same; the sword is to be sent to York by Christmas-day, that the King may decorate Alexander the illustrious King of Scotland therewith, in his belt of knighthood [5], &c.

John de Summercotes and the King's tailor are commanded to make, without delay, a costly couch, and to send it to the King at York, to present to the illustrious King of Scotland on Christmas-day:

And, Edward of Westminster is commanded to procure immediately a pair of silver gilt spurs with fastenings of silk, and to let the King have them at York on Christmas-day, for the use of Alexander King of Scotland, &c.

1 William of Malmsbury, in his account of Athelstan's being knighted by King Alfred, his grandfather, mentions the giving him a sword and a rich belt, with a crimson or scarlet robe, as the ensigns of knighthood. Malmsb. de Gestis Reg. Angl. l. ii. c. 6.

2 It was usual for the person who was to be knighted to watch all the previous night in the church, and the couch was given for him to rest on.

The orders for the dresses worn by the King and Queen of England at the marriage ceremony of the Princess Margaret with the King of Scotland, the day after he was knighted, are as follows:

"Concerning Robes for the use of the King and Queen." I. de Sumercote and Roger the tailor are commanded to get made, without delay, four robes of the best brocade which they can procure, namely, two for the King's use, and two for the Queen's, with orfraies, and gems of various colours; the tunics are to be of softer brocade than the mantles and the supertunics; and the mantles are to be furred with ermine, and the supertunics with miniver: the King requires that the aforesaid robes, elegantly made, should be at York by Christmas."

The same are commanded to get, besides the two robes which the King ordered for his own use, three robes with "Queyntisis" (devices) made for the Queen's use, namely, one robe of the best violet-coloured brocade they can procure, with three small leopards in the front, and three others behind; and two robes of other cloth, the best that can be procured. And these, seemly and elegantly made, are to be at York by Christmas.

The instruments on the Close Rolls respecting maritime affairs are very numerous, and exhibit many interesting particulars of the naval force kept for the defence of the realm and for the security of the British seas. At page 33 the number of ships attached to each of the principal ports is stated, together with the names of their commanders; and there are several notices confirmatory of the fact, that the Cinque Ports were obliged to find fifty-two ships for fifteen days, at their own charge, for the service of the state. The materials used for ship-building, and the tonnage and dimensions of ships and galleys, are described, some as being capable of carrying eight or ten horses, and others of a different description, large enough to admit of twenty oars. From an instrument at page 117 it may be inferred that the first establishment of a dock-yard at Portsmouth took place in the reign of King John; viz.

The King to the sheriff of Southampton, &c. We order you, without delay, by the view of lawful men, to cause our docks[1] at Portsmouth to be inclosed with a good and strong wall, in such manner as our beloved and faithful William archdeacon of Taunton will tell you, for the preservation of our ships and galleys; and likewise to cause penthouses to be made to the same walls, as the same archdeacon will also tell you, in which all our ships' tackle may be safely kept: and use as much dispatch as you can, in order that the same may be completed this summer, lest in the ensuing winter our ships and galleys and their rigging should incur any damage by your default. And when we know the cost, it shall be accounted to you.—20th May, 14 John, A.D. 1212. Page 117.

The King to Geoffry de Nevill, and the mayor of Angouleme, and Ralph de Fay, and all the soldiers and mariners of their company, &c. We command you, together with Geoffry de Lucy and William de Wika, and our sailors, to arrest and take into our hands all ships coming from Poictou, which you may fall in with in your voyage, and send them safely to us in England, with all the chattels found in them; and take such counsel for guarding them that we may in nowise be deceived.—20th May, 14 John. Page 117.

The archdeacon of Taunton is ordered to send immediately to the King, at the Tower of London, all the cloth which came to Portsmouth in the three ships which were captured by the King's sailors in the port of Barfleur, and sent to Portsmouth.

The King to William archdeacon of Taunton, &c. Know ye that we have given to our dear brother William earl of Salisbury the ship called the Countess, which was captured by our sailors. And therefore we command you to let him have the same.—20th May, 14 John. Page 117.

The King to William archdeacon of Taunton, &c. Know ye that we have given to our beloved R. de Mariscis, archdeacon of Northumberland, and W. Briwer, two of the ships, with all their apparel, which our sailors captured. And therefore we command you to retain to our use the best of those ships, and give the second best to Richard de Mariscis, and the third best to W. Briwer, with all their apparel.—2d June, 14 John. Page 118.

The King to William archdeacon of Taunton. Know ye that we have given to our beloved and faithful E. archdeacon of Durham, and Philip de Ulcot, one good ship of those which were captured by our sailors off the coast of Normandy. And therefore we command you to let them have that ship.—9th July, 14 John, A.D. 1212. Page 120.

Peter [1], &c. to the sheriff of Norfolk and Nicholas de Thorp, greeting. We order you to cause a hundred men of Dunwich to be chosen, fit to guard the sea-coast, and to perform this business with such secrecy, discretion, and prudence, that the lord the King and ourself may be enabled with good reason to commend your labour. And the expence which you incur for this shall be accounted to you at the Exchequer. Witness ourself at Dunton, on the 5th of Sept., 16 John. Page 211.

Matthew Paris relates, that about the year 1237 the King's anger was again inflamed against Hubert de Burgh the earl of Kent, because Richard earl of Gloucester, while he was yet in his minority and a ward of the King, had privately espoused Earl Hubert's daughter Margaret, without the King's licence or consent; for it was reported that Henry had sought a matrimonial alliance with the young Earl of Gloucester for a near relative of William elect of Valentia, a Provençois by birth. At length, however, Earl Hubert having asserted that he had no knowledge of the affair, and that he was guiltless of any participation in the act, a reconciliation was effected, after much intercession, and the royal indignation appeased by the promise of a sum of money. Matth. Paris, p. 299.

The following account of the transaction occurs on the Close Roll of the 22d Hen. III.:

On Tuesday, the morrow of St. Michael, Hubert de Burgh earl of Kent came to Eckles, by the King's command; and the King, addressing him, demanded if he were then willing to resign to him the marriage of Richard de Clare, according to the promise he made at Gloucester, when the King admitted him to his peace, on his giving up all claim to the said marriage; but Hubert, on being called upon by the King to fulfil his part of the agreement, replied, that as he had not his counsel there present he could not well make answer thereunto; and, after some delays, the Earl at length came to Kennington, and there acknowledged, that, after the reconciliation had taken place at Gloucester, the King sent for him in the evening, and leading him up to the altar, said that he wished him to swear thereon never again to mention the subject of Richard de Clare, and this he swore, nor ever after either spoke thereof, or took any further measures respecting it. But some of the nobles speaking with him on the subject of his daughter's marriage, said, that as it had proceeded so far she ought to be affianced; and then came the Countess his wife, and fell at his feet, saying, that her daughter had so far committed herself to Richard de Clare that she could not be wedded to another, and that her daughter could not, therefore, be married then: however, from his wife's speech he could not be certain whether a marriage had taken place between the said Richard and his daughter; and he said that his wife told him that a marriage had been celebrated between them at St. Edmonds whilst the Earl was besieged at Merton; and on being asked how he interpreted the oath, he replied, that the King understood it as meaning to resign to him all claim to the marriage, and he understood it so too. And the Earl further acknowledged that the King told him when he made the oath that he should not have his favour unless he did so. And the Earl afterwards came and asked for a further day to certify himself fully, in order that on such day he might positively resign the marriage if he could, and if he were not able to do so, he would make amends according to the judgment of his peers; and a day was appointed him, on a promise not to ask for further delay.

Peter de Colechurch, the celebrated architect of the first London Bridge built with stone, is stated, in the Annals of Waverly, to have died in the year 1205, and to have been buried on the bridge.[2] At page 49 of this Volume is an entry, from which it may be inferred that Peter de Colechurch was, at that time, just deceased.

A few of the numerous entries relating to the royal diversions are selected, as showing the partiality of our early monarchs to hawking and the sports of the field.

The King to his beloved friend Waldemer, by the grace of God, the illustrious King of the Danes and Sclavonians, and duke and lord of Holsace, sends greeting, and the affection of sincere love. We send into your land our faithful Brien Hostiarius to purchase birds for our use, and we most anxiously entreat your love to be pleased to maintain him and those who shall accompany him for that purpose, and to suffer them to be under your safe conduct and protection, so that we may be indebted to you for this favour. And the ships which shall convey our birds may come in security to England to negotiate, according to the form of the letters patent which we have caused to be made thereupon.

In the same form a letter was addressed to Absalon earl of Zealand, with this addition, that if the same Brien should stand in need of money, to let him have it, and the lord the King will transmit to him

[2] During the demolition of old London bridge in the year 1832, the remains of a body were discovered in clearing away the chapel pier, and were probably those of Peter de Colechurch, the original architect of the bridge, who was here interred: the supposition is strengthened by the fact that the place in which they were found was under the lower floor of the chapel, in an inclosure built up in small courses of free stone.

by his messenger such money, when he pleases. Witness Peter lord bishop of Winchester, at Lambeth, 2d Oct., 14th John.—Page 132.

The King to John Fitz Hugh, &c. We send to you, by William de Merc and R. de Erleham, three girefalcons, and Gibbun the girefalcon, than which we do not possess a better, and one falcon gentle, commanding you to receive them, and place them in the mewes, and provide for their food plump goats, and sometimes good hens; and once every week let them have the flesh of hares, and procure good mastiffs to guard the mewes. And the cost which you incur in keeping those falcons, and the expences of Spark, the man of W. de Merc, who will attend them, with one man and one horse, shall be accounted to you at the Exchequer.—21st March, 16 John. Page 192.

The King to the sheriff of Dorsetshire, &c. We send to you our three girefalcons to be mewed at Dorchester, commanding you to find whatever is required by Robin de Hauville, their keeper, with his horse and man, and procure for him, for the food of the said girefalcons, young pigeons and swine's flesh, and once a week the flesh of fowl. And the cost, &c. shall be accounted to you at the Exchequer. —12th May, 14 John. Page 118.

The King to Philip Marc, sheriff of Nottingham, greeting. We send to you Thomas de Weston, with our two girefalcons, namely, Blakeman and the foolish falcon, and with three greyhounds, and Haukinus de Hauvill with le Refuse our girefalcon, and two greyhounds, commanding you to let our aforesaid girefalcons be mewed and well kept, and to find necessaries for the aforesaid Thomas, with one horse and his groom, and the aforesaid Haukinus, with one horse and his groom, during their stay with you; and it shall be accounted to you at the Exchequer.—16th Feb., 4 Hen. 3. Page 412.

The King to the sheriff of Nottingham, greeting. We command you to find necessaries for our beloved and faithful Walter de Hauvill during his stay with you at Northampton, to ensaim Blakeman our girefalcon, and to make him fly three or four times; and it shall be accounted to you at the Exchequer.—21st Sept., 3 Hen. 3. Page 400.

Gilbert de Hauvill is commanded to let Refuse, the King's girefalcon, which is under the care of Ralph de Hauvill, fly with Blakeman, the King's girefalcon, which is under his care, and to pay such diligent attention thereto as to merit the King's thanks.—10th Oct., 3 Hen. 3. Page 401.

The King to Philip Marc, greeting. We command you, upon sight hereof, to send to us, in Gloucestershire, Gilbert de Hauvill, with Blakeman our girefalcon, which he has had to mew, and find him his reasonable expences in going thither to us; also discharge for him the expences which he has incurred since his girefalcon began to fly after its moulting; and it shall be accounted to you at the Exchequer.—5th Nov., 4 Hen. 3. Page 407.

The King to William de Pratell, and the bailiffs of Falk de Breaut of the Isle of Ely, greeting. We command you to find, out of the issues of the see of Ely, necessaries for Richard the huntsman, who was with the Bishop of Ely, and for his two horses and four grooms; also find for his fifteen greyhounds and twenty-one hounds de mota their allowance of bread or paste, as they may require it, and let them hunt sometimes in the Bishop's chase for the flesh upon which they are fed.—13th March, 17 John. Page 253.

The King to Thomas de Samford, greeting. We send to you Robert de Halingee, commanding you to find for him and Nicholas his companion, with eight of our greyhounds, which they have under their care, such necessaries as they shall in reason require.—13th March, 17 John. Page 253.

The seneschal of Angoulesme is commanded to defray the reasonable expences of the King's huntsmen, "valtrarii," and dogs and their keepers; and if they should take any fat stag, the flitch or sides, haunches and flank are to be reserved for the King's use; and the tongue and the lard are to be sent to the Queen.—1214. Page 169.

PRICES, WAGES, and HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.—It would seem, from the numerous payments ordered to be made, and the innumerable mandates for provisions, dresses, and other domestic necessaries, that the whole of the civil and privy purse expenditure must have passed through the Chancery, as the most minute expences and allowances were never satisfied until the order for payment had issued under the Great Seal. In process of time, however, when the business transacted by the Chancery Court became more important and defined in its nature, the execution of this species of business was transferred to other departments.

From the account given in Fleta, (lib. 2. cap. 14.) the author of which treatise was contemporary with Edward I., it appears that all the civil, military, and domestic expences of the Crown were liquidated in the department called the Wardrobe. The description[1] of the office of Treasurer of the Wardrobe fully proves that all the expenditure which, up to this period, had passed through the Chancery, now devolved upon the Wardrobe. The separation, it is conjectured, took place about the latter part of the reign of Henry III., which may be inferred from the omission (though not entirely so) of similar entries to those which occur in the early part of his reign, as also in that of his predecessor.

PRICES, &c.—The prices of most commodities then in use may here be ascertained, and the following are a few illustrative extracts.

Wine[2].—Cost of 50 tuns, 125 marks. Sometimes £75. Wine of Gascony, 30*s.* per tun. Wine of Aucerne, 2 and 3½ marks per tun. French wine, 2½ marks per tun.

Horses.—The prices of these animals vary from £14 to £50 Anjou.

Fat Hogs. (Bacones.)—Prices, from 2*s.* to 4*s.* each.

Wool.—Price, £6 15*s.* per sack. Taking the bad with the good, 6 marks per sack.

Salt.—Price, 10*s.* 4*d.* per 8 quarters and 1 bushel: occasionally varying from 2*s.* to 3*s.* per quarter.

Wax.—Price, from 5*d.* to 7*d.* per lb. Occasionally 8*d.*

Corn.—Price, varying according to its quality; generally fetching a high price; proportionably increased by hard winters, or the excessive drought of summers. It is sometimes problematical as to which corn is meant, Bladum and Frumentum appearing to have been used synonimously, though not so in reality. From what can be collected on this subject it, however, seems that Wheat varied from 2*s.* to 9*s.* per quarter; Flour, from 5*s.* to 8*s.*; Barley, from 3*s.* 4*d.* to 5*s.* per quarter.

A mow of Oats, £4 13*s.* 4*d.* Oats, 12*d.* per quarter.

A mow of Corn, £6 13*s.* 4*d.*

A sack of Demesne Flour contained 1 quarter.

Prices of divers articles, too numerous for mention here, may be seen at pp. 153. 156. 157. 160. 384. 391. 412. 424, and elsewhere, in many places.

Particulars regarding the economy of the King's household as occur scattered through various parts of this Work; and the sums of money paid to artizans and workmen employed in the King's business, as well as those to every individual in office, from the Chancellor to the cook and scullion, are here most minutely recorded.

By retail, that Poictou wine should not be sold at above 4*d.* per quart, and White wine not above 6*d.* per quart. But this order, being found too strict, was afterwards mitigated, and Red wine was allowed to be sold at 6*d.* per quart, White wine at 8*d.* (Ann. Burton. p. 257.) In the year 1207 an order was sent to the Barons of the Exchequer (vide p. 88 of this Work) to account to Regin. de Cornhill for ten tuns of wine "de Regula," at 33*s.* per tun; three tuns of wine of Aucerne, at 5 marks per tun; eighteen tuns of French wine at 33*s.* 4*d.* per tun; eight tuns of French wine at 30*s.* per tun. French wine reckoned at 2½*d.* per gallon; Red wine at 2*d.* per gallon.

The Esterman (Steersman ?) - - - - -		0	7	—

Notices of wages due and payments made to nuncios and messengers, sent with letters or messages on the affairs of the King, are also very numerous.

Messengers going from place to place in England received 3d. per diem.

Persons employed upon missions out of the country were paid accordingly. One who went into Gascony had three shillings for his expences; another, for going into Germany, had four marks.

Some of the foregoing entries are curious, as showing the intercourse and constant communication then existing between this and foreign countries, and may at the same time lead to the elucidation of many points in history relative to our connexion with the Continent.

ARTS. — One or two items relating to the arts in general will be here sufficient to excite attention to numerous similar entries with which the Rolls abound. At page 381 is a writ of liberate, whereby the Treasurer of the Exchequer was commanded to reimburse Walter, the goldsmith who made the King's seal, the five marks of silver used in making the same; he is also to have, for the workmanship, what will content him; and, at page 383, we find that the said Walter, whose surname appears to have been "de Ripa," was content to receive 40*s.* for the labour he had bestowed on that work. The beauty and elegance of the seal here alluded to still excites great admiration, on account of the perfection of which it is a proof the graphic art had attained in an age which has been called barbarous.[1]

The low rate of remuneration which is said to have contented Walter, the goldsmith, when brought into contrast with modern charges for similar works, leads us to reflect on the comparative value of labour in that age as opposed to the present; but, in so doing, we must not forget that money then bore a value, according to the best calculations, about fifteen times greater than it does at present. The shillings of that day were three times the weight they are now; and yet a modern shilling would at that time have bought about five times as much as it will at present; consequently, one shilling of the coin of Henry III. would produce fifteen times as much as one of William IV.[2] Allowing this mode of computation to be just, if the 42*s.* received by Walter de Ripa be multiplied by the number 3, to make up for the difference in the weight of silver, and then by 5, for the difference in the value of money at the two periods, the whole will amount to £31 10*s.* of modern English money, as the sum charged for such elaborate work, when artists were scarce, and no competition going on. The same mode of computation is applicable to the other prices of different articles mentioned in this Work.

It appears by various entries on the Close Rolls of the reign of King Henry III. that this monarch was a great encourager of the arts, and of painting in particular.

The Master of the Knights Templars is commanded to allow Henry of the Wardrobe, the bearer of these letters, to have for the Queen's use a certain great book which is in the house of his order in London, written in the French dialect, wherein are contained the exploits of Antioch[3], and of the Kings and others.—17th May, 34 Hen. 3. And the following instrument probably explains for what reason this book was wanted:

Edward of Westminster is commanded to cause the History of Antioch to be painted in the King's chamber in the Tower of London, as Thomas Espernir shall direct him, and the King will allow him the cost incurred therein.—5th June, 35 Henry 3.

The subject of the History of Antioch appears to have been a favourite one with King Henry, for in the twenty-first year of his reign he ordered the History of Antioch, with King Richard's single combat, to be painted in a chamber at his palace of Clarendon.

The King, in presence of Master William the painter, a monk of Westminster, lately at Winchester, contrived and gave orders for a certain picture to be made at Westminster, in the wardrobe where he was accustomed to wash his face, representing the King who was rescued by his dogs from the seditions which were plotted against that King by his subjects; respecting which same picture the King addressed other letters to you, Edward of Westminster; and the King commands Philip Luvel

[1] An engraving of this seal may be seen in the first volume of the late edition of Rymer's Fœdera.

[2] Silver was then twenty pence per ounce. Twelve ounces, or a pound of silver, constituted a pound sterling. A pound of silver in weight now makes three pounds sterling; and consequently as every shilling of that time was in weight the twentieth part of a pound, it must have been equal in value to three shillings of this. Matt. Paris. p. 208.

[3] Joseph of Exeter, called Josephus Iscanus, a Latin poet of some note, wrote an heroic poem called the War of Antioch, or the Third Crusade under King Richard. It was probably a French translation of this poem that is here alluded to.

his treasurer, and the aforesaid Edward of Westminster, to cause the same Master William to have his costs and charges for painting the aforesaid picture, without delay; and when he shall know the cost, he will give them a writ of Liberate therefor. Witness the King at Winchester, on the 30th June.—40 Hen. 3.

Otho the goldsmith is commanded, without delay, to put aside the picture which was begun to be painted in the King's great chamber at Westminster, beneath the large historical painting of the same chamber, with the scrolls containing the figures and representations of lions, birds, and other beasts, and to paint it green, after the fashion of a curtain or hanging, so that the effect of the great history may be kept unimpaired. Witness the King at Windsor, on 24th August.—34 Hen. 3. m. 7.

Edward of Westminster is commanded to cause effigies of the apostles to be painted round St. Stephen's Chapel, and the judgment-day on the western side; and in like manner to cause the figure of the blessed Virgin Mary to be painted on a tablet; so that these may be ready at the King's coming here. Witness the King at Bridgwater.—14th August, 34 Hen. 3.

Edward of Westminster is commanded to order a banner to be made of white silk, and in the centre of the banner there is to be a representation of the crucifixion, with the effigies of the blessed Mary and St. John, embroidered in orfraies, and on the top a star and a new moon crescent; and the said banner is to be got ready by Easter. Also to search for a large bough, if it can be procured, for the shrine of St. Edward.—11th March. Claus. 35 Hen. 3. m. 17.

Edward Fitz Otho is commanded to order a bell to be made out of the metal which is in his custody, larger than those which were made under his direction the year before; and if that metal be not sufficient to make it, to buy in London or elsewhere as much metal as shall be wanting, because the King does not wish any of the old bells to be broken up on account of any deficiency of metal; and he is also to take care that the bell be completed before St. Edward's day.—Claus. 34 Hen. 3. m. 8.

Edward of Westminster is again commanded to get a bell made by the advice of the founder, which, though not so large as the great bell at Westminster, may nevertheless correspond therewith in tone. Also to have a large cross placed in the nave of the church at Westminster, and to buy two angels, representing the cherubim, to stand on each side of the cross.—Claus. 35 Hen. 3. m. 19.

MISCELLANEA.—Pensions and Presents to the Nurses of the Royal Family.—The King to his Barons of the Exchequer, greeting. Know ye that we have granted to William Merchant, falconer, the Rent of £7 in Chippeham, which Hodierna, the nurse of the lord King Richard our uncle, had, to support himself during our pleasure; and therefore we command you to allow the same William so to have that rent of £7, charged in the account of the sheriff of Wiltshire.—26th April, 4 Hen. 3. Page 416 b. A similar order to the sheriff of Wiltshire.

The King to the sheriff of Gloucester, greeting. We order you, as we have elsewhere ordered you, without let or difficulty, to pay to our beloved Elena, our nurse, the alms which the lord King John our father gave to her, to be received out of your county, to wit, two-pence a day; and render to her without delay the arrears thereof which are due to her, namely, for three terms; and you shall have it accounted to you at the Exchequer.—24th January, 2 Henry 3. Page 349.

The King to his barons of the Exchequer, greeting. We command you, upon inspection of our rolls of our Exchequer, to allow Eva, the nurse of Richard our brother, to have the payments which you shall find by the inrolment that she had by the hands of the sheriffs of Surrey, Hertford, and London, by gift of the lord King John our father, before the war raised between the aforesaid King John our father and his barons of England; and likewise to pay her the arrears which are due to her from the day on which peace was concluded between us and Louis.—26th March, 2 Hen. 3. Page 356.

The mayor and reeves of Winchester are commanded to cause Christiana de Rumes, nurse to the King's daughter Joane, to have every day two-pence to support herself.—9th Aug. 15 John. Page 150.

The King to his barons of the Exchequer, greeting. Know ye that we have given to Margaret, the nurse of Isabella our sister, one penny a day, to be received of our alms by the hands of the sheriff of Hereford, as Roesia la Custurere, deceased, was accustomed to receive it by the hands of the same sheriff; and therefore we command you to allow the aforesaid Margaret to have the same alms of one penny a day, as is aforesaid.—19th June, 3 Hen. 3. Page 393.

The keepers of the King's wines at Waltham are commanded to allow Alice, the nurse of Edward the King's son, to have half a cask of wine out of the King's wines which are in their custody, as a present from the King. Witness the King at Winchester, on the 12th July.—34 Henry 3.

Treatment of Prisoners.—The constable of Bristol is commanded to mitigate the duresse of Hugh Poinz, who is under his custody, still taking care that his guard be good; and to allow his friends to bring him what succour they please in food and clothing, so that he be safely guarded. Witness the King at Aylesbury.—16th Sept., 18 John. Page 288.

The King to the sheriff of Oxford, greeting. We order you to guard safely Gilbert de Stanford, who is in our prison, so that he incur no risk of his life; and allow Amicia, the wife of the same Gilbert, to have, without trouble, his land of Ricot, with its appurtenances, to support herself and her children therewith whilst the said Gilbert is in our prison. Witness Hubert de Burgh, the Justiciary, at Westminster.—23d July, 3 Hen. 3. Page 397.

Prisoners allowed to go out of custody to practice fencing, preparatory to a wager of battle.

The King to the sheriff of Lincoln, greeting. We order you, that if Walter de Stiveton, taken and imprisoned at the Tower of London for the death of William de Tillebroc, whereupon duel is waged between the same Walter and Roger de Chelvestun, who offers him challenge on this occasion, shall find you four and twenty good and lawful men of your county, who will undertake to have him before our justices at Westminster, in eight days of St. Michael, to fight that duel with him, then to accept for this such four and twenty good and lawful men, and signify the same by your letters to the constable of the Tower of London, making known to him their names; and we have commanded him, upon your signifying this to him, to deliver from prison the aforesaid Walter on the bail of the aforesaid lawful men, in manner aforesaid. And the said constable is commanded, upon receipt of the sheriff's instructions by letter, informing him of his having done as has been said, immediately to deliver the aforesaid Walter from prison in the manner prescribed; and in the meantime to keep the same Walter in free prison, so that he may live on his own resources, and learn to fence.—25th July, 4 Hen. 3. Page 424.

The King to the constable of Winchester, &c. We command you to permit Sir Jordan de Bianney, knight, whom you have in our prison, to go out of custody twice a day, or oftener, to fence, and in his place retain in prison Oliver de Vaux until his return; and when he returns then permit the same Oliver to depart and go where he will; and as you love all you possess, and your own body, do you see that the same Jordan be safely kept. Witness ourself at Brockenborough.—22d July 9 John. Page 88.

Erection of Gibbets.—Henry, by the grace of God, &c., to the sheriff of Middlesex, greeting. We order you to cause to be made, without any delay, in the place where the gallows were formerly erected, that is to say, at the Elms, (ad Ulmellos,) two good gibbets of strong and excellent timber, for hanging robbers and other malefactors; and the cost which you may incur for this shall be accounted to you, by the view and testimony of lawful men, at the Exchequer. Witness Hubert de Burgh, our Justiciary, at St. Albans.—22d May, 4 Hen. 3. Page 419.

Political Economy.—The King to Thomas Fitz Anthony, greeting. We command you not to suffer the men of Waterford, or any other persons of our dominion, to prevent Geoffry de Campvill, or our other barons of England, from bringing freely and without let into England their stock as well of corn as other things, for the improvement of our realm of England.—25th April, 2 Hen. 3. Page 359.

Articles ordered by the King.—The King to Hubert de Burgh, &c. We command you to send to us immediately, upon the sight of these letters, of sulphur, of tallow, of gum, and of pitch, each ten pounds, and four pounds of quicksilver; and if we stand in need of more to provide us therewith. Witness ourself at Roche-aux-Moines.—23d July, 16th John. Page 167.

Secrecy observed in moving the King's treasure.—The sheriff of Devon is ordered to find a good and secure ship for the King's messengers, whom he is sending to Poictou, to convey his treasure thither, and to take care that such ship be the first that goes, lest rumours be divulged of the King's treasure before it arrives in Poictou; and the cost will be allowed at the Exchequer.—25th July, 9 John. And on the 30th of July following the same sheriff is ordered to procure such ship at the lowest possible price. Page 89.

Persecution of the Jews.—The sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk is commanded to make proclamation in the city of Norwich, and in all the good towns of those counties, that no christian woman shall henceforth serve the Jews in nursing their young children, or in any other office. Witness the King at Westminster.—20th Nov. 19 Hen. 3.

Attendance on the Queen at dinner.—The King to Raplh de Ralegh and Geoffry de Martigny. We send to you the two sons of Richard de Umframville, namely, Odinell and Robert, and command you to let them wait daily before the Queen at dinner. But their preceptor is not to come before the Queen. Let them also sleep at night in the hall, and see that they be honourably attended to. Witness the King at Durham.—3d Sept. 14 John. A. D. 1212. Page 123.

Costly Drinks prepared for the King.— The keepers of the King's wines at Winchester are commanded to deliver to Robert de Monte Passalano any quantity and quality of wine that he may choose to have, to make therewith costly and delicate drinks for the King. Witness the King at Ludgershall. —26th Nov. 34 Hen. 3.

Some of the entries relative to the building and repairing of the King's palaces, castles, and houses, are extremely curious. In one, at page 52, Ralph de Neville is there ordered to have the King's kitchen at Clarendon covered with shingles [1], and the King's houses there to be properly repaired; also to procure two new kitchens to be built for cooking the King's dinner, one at Marlborough, and another at Ludgershall; and in each kitchen to cause a furnace to be erected large enough to cook two or three oxen.

Godfrey de Lyston, the keeper of the King's forest of Windsor, is commanded to give from out of that forest to Gilbert the King's carpenter at Windsor, as much timber as he will require to repair the hall and chambers in the upper castle of Windsor, where the King's children were nursed.—22d Jan., 40 Hen. 3.

At page 95 is an entry which touches upon a domestic custom, then, and long afterwards, practised in this country. The Barons of the Exchequer are ordered to account with Robert de Leveland for what he had expended in straw, and for the laying fine sand in the King's houses at Westminster, when the King slept there on the Friday [2], Saturday, and Sunday next before the feast of All Saints, in the ninth year of his reign.

The Editor cannot close this Introduction without acknowledging with thanks the zeal and talent evinced by His Majesty's Printers during the progress of this Work through the press.
